LIBRARY OF PRINCETON
JAN 21 1993
THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

~~B1253~~
~~.1794~~
~~v.3~~

SCC
#11,505
v.3

THE

WORKS

OF

JOHN LOCKE,

IN NINE VOLUMES.

THE NINTH EDITION.

VOLUME THE THIRD.

LONDON:

PRINTED FOR T. LONGMAN, B. LAW AND SON, J. JOHNSON,
C. DILLY, G. G. AND J. ROBINSON, T. CADELL, J. SEWELL,
W. OTRIDGE, W. RICHARDSON, F. AND C. RIVINGTON,
W. GOLDSMITH, T. PAYNE, LEIGH AND SOTHEBY,
S. HAYES, R. FAULDER, B. AND J. WHITE,
W. LOWNDES, G. AND T. WILKIE, AND J. WALKER.

1794.

CONTENTS

OF THIS

VOLUME.

Page

A LETTER to the Right Rev. Edward Lord Biſhop of Worceſter, concerning ſome Paſſages relating to Mr. Locke's Eſſay of Human Underſtanding, in a late Diſcourſe of his Lordſhip's in Vindication of the Trinity - - - - - - 1

Mr. Locke's Reply to the Biſhop of Worceſter's Anſwer to his Letter - - - - - - 97

An Anſwer to Remarks upon an Eſſay concerning Human Underſtanding - - - - - - 186

Mr. Locke's Reply to the Biſhop of Worceſter's Anſwer to his ſecond Letter - - - - - 191

Index,

A

LETTER

TO THE RIGHT REVEREND

EDWARD,

LORD BISHOP OF WORCESTER,

Concerning ſome Paſſages relating to

MR. LOCKE'S ESSAY OF HUMAN UNDERSTANDING:

IN A

LATE DISCOURSE OF HIS LORDSHIP'S, IN VINDICATION OF THE TRINITY.

A

LETTER

TO THE RIGHT REVEREND

EDWARD,

LORD BISHOP OF WORCESTER.

MY LORD,

I CANNOT but look upon it as a great honour, that your lordſhip, who are ſo thoroughly acquainted with the incomparable writings of antiquity, and know ſo well how to entertain yourſelf with the great men in the commonwealth of letters, ſhould at any time take into your hand my mean papers; and ſo far beſtow any of your valuable minutes on my Eſſay of Human Underſtanding, as to let the world ſee you have thought my notions worth your lordſhip's conſideration. My aim in that, as well as every thing elſe written by me, being purely to follow truth as far as I could diſcover it, I think myſelf beholden to whoever ſhows me my miſtakes, as to one who, concurring in my deſign, helps me forward in my way.

Your lordſhip has been pleaſed to favour me with ſome thoughts of yours in this kind, in your late learned "Diſcourſe, in Vindication of the Doctrine of the Trinity;" and, I hope I may ſay, have gone a little out of your way to do me that kindneſs; for the obligation is thereby the greater. And if your lordſhip has brought in the mention of my book in a chapter, intitled, "Objections againſt the Trinity, in Point of Reaſon, anſwered;" when, in my whole Eſſay, I think there is not to be found any thing like an objection againſt the Trinity: I have the more to acknowledge to your lordſhip, who would not let the foreignneſs of the ſubject hinder your lordſhip from endeavouring to ſet me right, as to ſome errours your lordſhip apprehends in my book; when other writers uſing ſome notions like mine, gave you that which was occaſion enough for you to do me the favour to take notice of what you diſlike in my Eſſay.

Your lordſhip's name is of ſo great authority in the learned world, that I who profeſs myſelf more ready, upon conviction, to recant, than I was at firſt to publiſh, my miſtakes, cannot pay that reſpect is due to it, without telling the reaſons why I ſtill retain any of my notions, after your lordſhip's having appeared diſſatisfied with them. This muſt be my apology, and I hope ſuch a one as your lordſhip will allow, for my examining what you have printed againſt ſeveral paſſages in my book, and my ſhowing the reaſons why it has not prevailed with me to quit them.

That your lordſhip's reaſonings may loſe none of their force by my miſapprehending or miſrepreſenting them, (a way too familiarly uſed in writings that have any appearance of controverſy) I ſhall crave leave to give the reader your lordſhip's arguments in the full ſtrength of your own expreſſions; that ſo in them he may have the advantage to ſee the deficiency of my anſwers, in any point where I ſhall be ſo unfortunate as not to perceive, or not to follow, the light your lordſhip affords me.

Your lordſhip having in the two or three preceding pages, juſtly, as I think, found fault with the account of reaſon, given by the Unitarians and a late writer, in thoſe paſſages you quote out of them; and then coming to the nature of ſubſtance, and relating what that author has said concerning the mind's getting of simple ideas, and those simple ideas being the sole matter and foundation of all our reasonings; your lordship thus concludes,

ſaid

" Then it follows, that we can have no foundation of " reasoning, where there can be no such ideas from " sensation or reflection."

" Now this is the case of substance; it is not intro- " mitted by the senses, nor depends upon the operation " of the mind; and so it cannot be within the compass " of our reason. And therefore I do not wonder, that " the gentlemen of this new way of reasoning have " almost discarded substance out of the reasonable part " of the world. For they not only tell us," &c.

This, as I remember, is the first place where your lordship is pleased to quote any thing out of my " Essay " of Human Understanding," which your lordship does in these words following:

" That we can have no idea of it by sensation or re- " flection: but that nothing is signified by it, only an " uncertain supposition of we know not what." And therefore it is paralleled, more than once, with the Indian philosopher's " He-knew-not-what; which sup- " ported the tortoise, that supported the elephant, that " supported the earth: so substance was found out only " to support accidents. And that when we talk of " substances, we talk like children; who, being asked " a question about somewhat which they knew not, " readily gave this satisfactory answer, that it is some- " thing."

These words of mine your lordship brings to prove, that I am one of " the gentlemen of this new way of " reasoning, that have almost discarded substance out of " the reasonable part of the world." An accusation which your lordship will pardon me, if I do not readily know what to plead to, because I do not understand what is " almost to discard substance out of the reasonable " part of the world." If your lordship means by it, that I deny or doubt that there is in the world any such thing as substance, that your lordship will acquit me of, when your lordship looks again into that chapter, which you have cited more than once, where your lordſhip will find theſe words:

Human underſtanding, B. ii. c. 23. § 4. "When we talk or think of any particular ſort of corporeal ſubſtances, as horſe, "ſtone, &c. though the idea we have of "either of them be but the complication "or collection of thoſe ſeveral ſimple ideas of ſenſible "qualities which we uſe to find united in the thing "called horſe or ſtone; yet becauſe we cannot conceive "how they ſhould ſubſiſt alone, nor one in another, we "ſuppoſe them exiſting in, and ſupported by ſome "common ſubject, which ſupport we denote by the "name ſubſtance; though it be certain, we have no "clear and diſtinct idea of that thing we ſuppoſe a "ſupport." And again,

§ 5. "The ſame happens concerning the operations of the mind, viz. thinking, reaſoning, "fearing, &c. which we conſidering not to ſubſiſt of "themſelves, nor apprehending how they can belong "to body, or be produced by it, we are apt to think "theſe the actions of ſome other ſubſtance, which we "call ſpirit: whereby yet it is evident, that having no "other idea or notion of matter, but ſomething wherein "thoſe many ſenſible qualities, which affect our ſenſes, "do ſubſiſt; by ſuppoſing a ſubſtance, wherein thinking, knowing, doubting, and a power of moving, &c. "do ſubſiſt, we have as clear a notion of the nature or "ſubſtance of ſpirit, as we have of body; the one being "ſuppoſed to be (without knowing what it is) the "ſubſtratum to thoſe ſimple ideas we have from without; and the other ſuppoſed (with a like ignorance "of what it is) to be the ſubſtratum to thoſe operations, which we experiment in ourſelves within." And again,

§ 6. "Whatever therefore be the ſecret nature of "ſubſtance in general, all the ideas we have of "particular diſtinct ſubſtances are nothing but ſeveral "combinations of ſimple ideas, co-exiſting in ſuch, "though unknown, cauſe of their union, as makes the "whole ſubſiſt of itſelf."

And

And I further say in the same section, "That we "suppose these combinations to rest in, and to be ad- "herent to that unknown, common subject, which in- "heres not in any thing else. And that our complex "ideas of substances, besides all those simple ideas they "are made up of, have always the confused idea of "something to which they belong, and in which they "subsist: and therefore when we speak of any sort of "substance, we say it is a thing having such and such "qualities; a body is a thing that is extended, figured, "and capable of motion; a spirit, a thing capable of "thinking."

These, and the like fashions of speaking, intimate, that the substance is supposed always something, besides the extension, figure, solidity, motion, thinking, or other observable idea, though we know not what it is.

"Our idea of body, I say, is an extended, "solid substance; and our idea of our souls "is of a substance that thinks." B. ii. c. 23. § 22. So that as long as there is any such thing as body or spirit in the world, I have done nothing towards the discarding substance out of the reasonable part of the world. Nay, as long as there is any simple idea or sensible quality left, according to my way of arguing, substance cannot be discarded; because all simple ideas, all sensible qualities, carry with them a supposition of a substratum to exist in, and of a substance wherein they inhere: and of this that whole chapter is so full, that I challenge any one who reads it to think I have almost, or one jot discarded substance out of the reasonable part of the world. And of this, man, horse, sun, water, iron, diamond, &c. which I have mentioned of distinct sorts of substances, will be my witnesses as long as any such thing remains in being; of which I say, "that the ideas "of substances are such combinations of "simple ideas, as are taken to represent "distinct, particular things, subsisting by themselves, "in which the supposed or confused idea of substance "is always the first and chief." B. ii. c. 12. § 6.

If by almost discarding substance out of the reasonable part of the world your lordship means, that I have deſtroyed, and almoſt diſcarded the true idea we have of it, by calling it "a ſubſtratum, a ſuppoſi-

B. ii. c. 23. § 1. "tion of we know not what ſupport of ſuch
§ 2. "ſuch qualities as are capable of producing
§ 3. "ſimple ideas in us; an obſcure and re-
B. ii. c. 13. § 19. "lative idea: that without knowing what "it is, it is that which ſupports accidents; "ſo that of ſubſtance we have no idea of what it is, but "only a confuſed and obſcure one, of what it does;" I muſt confeſs this, and the like I have ſaid of our idea of ſubſtance; and ſhould be very glad to be convinced by your lordſhip, or any-body elſe, that I have ſpoken too meanly of it. He that would ſhow me a more clear and diſtinct idea of ſubſtance, would do me a kindneſs I ſhould thank him for. But this is the beſt I can hitherto find, either in my own thoughts, or in the books of logicians: for their account or idea of it is, that it is "Ens," or "res per ſe ſubſiſtens et ſubſtans accidentibus;" which in effect is no more, but that ſubſtance is a being or thing; or, in ſhort, ſomething they know not what, or of which they have no clearer idea, than that it is ſomething which ſupports accidents, or other ſimple ideas or modes, and is not ſupported itſelf as a mode or an accident. So that I do not ſee but Burgerſdicius, Sanderſon, and the whole tribe of logicians, muſt be reckoned with "the gentlemen of this new way of "reaſoning, who have almoſt diſcarded ſubſtance out "of the reaſonable part of the world."

But ſuppoſing, my lord, that I or theſe gentlemen, logicians of note in the ſchools, ſhould own, that we have a very imperfect, obſcure, inadequate idea of ſubſtance; would it not be a little too hard to charge us with diſcarding ſubſtance out of the world? For what almoſt diſcarding, and reaſonable part of the world, ſignify, I muſt confeſs I do not clearly comprehend: but let almoſt, and reaſonable part, ſignify here what they will, for I dare ſay your lordſhip meant ſomething by them, would not your lordſhip think you were a little too hardly dealt with, if for acknowledging yourſelf to have a very imperfect and inadequate idea of God, or of ſeveral other things which, in this very treatiſe, you confeſs confess our understandings come short in and cannot comprehend, you should be accused to be one of these gentlemen that have almost discarded God, or those other mysterious things, whereof you contend we have very imperfect and inadequate ideas, out of the reasonable world? For I suppose your lordship means by almost discarding out of the reasonable world something that is blameable, for it seems not to be inserted for a commendation; and yet I think he deserves no blame, who owns the having imperfect, inadequate, obscure ideas, where he has no better: however, if it be inferred from thence, that either he almost excludes those things out of being, or out of rational discourse, if that be meant by the reasonable world; for the first of these will not hold, because the being of things in the world depends not on our ideas: the latter indeed is true, in some degree, but is no fault; for it is certain, that where we have imperfect, inadequate, confused, obscure ideas, we cannot discourse and reason about those things so well, fully, and clearly, as if we had perfect, adequate, clear and distinct ideas.

Your lordship, I must own, with great reason, takes notice that I paralleled, more than once, our idea of substance with the Indian philosopher's he-knew-not-what, which supported the tortoise, &c.

This repetition is, I confess, a fault in exact writing: but I have acknowledged and excused it in these words in my preface, "I am not ignorant how little I herein "consult my own reputation, when I knowingly let my "Essay go with a fault so apt to disgust the most judi- "cious, who are always the nicest readers." And there further add, "that I did not publish my Essay for such "great masters of knowledge as your lordship; but "fitted it to men of my own size, to whom repetitions "might be sometimes useful." It would not therefore have been besides your lordship's generosity (who were not intended to be provoked by the repetition) to have passed by such a fault as this, in one who pretends not beyond the lower rank of writers. But I see your lordship would have me exact and without any faults; and I with wiſh I could be ſo, the better to deſerve your lordſhip's approbation.

My ſaying, " that when we talk of ſubſtance, we " talk like children; who being aſked a queſtion about " ſomething, which they know not, readily give this " ſatisfactory anſwer, that it is ſomething;" your lordſhip ſeems mightily to lay to heart, in theſe words that follow:

" If this be the truth of the caſe, we muſt ſtill talk " like children, and I know not how it can be remedied. " For if we cannot come at a rational idea of ſubſtance, " we can have no principle of certainty to go upon in " this debate."

If your lordſhip has any better and diſtincter idea of ſubſtance than mine is, which I have given an account of, your lordſhip is not at all concerned in what I have there ſaid. But thoſe whoſe idea of ſubſtance, whether a rational or not rational idea, is like mine, ſomething he knows not what, muſt in that, with me, talk like children, when they ſpeak of ſomething they know not what. For a philoſopher that ſays, that which ſupports accidents is ſomething he knows not what; and a country-man that ſays, the foundation of the church at Harlem is ſupported by ſomething he-knows-not-what; and a child that ſtands in the dark upon his mother's muff, and ſays he ſtands upon ſomething he-knows-not-what; in this reſpect talk all three alike. But if the country-man knows, that the foundation of the church at Harlem is ſupported by a rock, as the houſes about Briſtol are; or by gravel, as the houſes about London are; or by wooden piles, as the houſes in Amſterdam are; it is plain, that then having a clear and diſtinct idea of the thing that ſupports the church, he does not talk of this matter as a child; nor will he of the ſupport of accidents, when he has a clearer and more diſtinct idea of it, than that it is barely ſomething. But as long as we think like children, in caſes where our ideas are no clearer nor diſtincter than theirs, I agree with your lordſhip, that I know not how it can be remedied, but that we muſt talk like them.

Your

Your lordſhip's next paragraph begins thus: "I do "not ſay, that we can have a clear idea of ſubſtance, "either by ſenſation or reflection; but from hence I "argue, that this is a very inſufficient diſtribution of "the ideas neceſſary to reaſon."

Your lordſhip here argues againſt a propoſition that I know no-body that holds: I am ſure the author of the Eſſay of Human Underſtanding never thought, nor in that Eſſay hath any where ſaid, that the ideas that come into the mind by ſenſation and reflection, are all the ideas that are neceſſary to reaſon, or that reaſon is exerciſed about; for then he muſt have laid by all the ideas of ſimple and mixed modes and relations, and the complex ideas of the ſpecies of ſubſtances, about which he has ſpent ſo many chapters; and muſt have denied that theſe complex ideas are the objects of men's thoughts or reaſonings, which he is far enough from. All that he has ſaid about ſenſation and reflection is, that all our ſimple ideas are received by them, and that theſe ſimple ideas are the foundation of all our knowledge, for as much as all our complex, relative, and general ideas are made by the mind, abſtracting, enlarging, comparing, compounding, and referring, &c. theſe ſimple ideas, and their ſeveral combinations, one to another; whereby complex and general ideas are formed of modes, relations, and the ſeveral ſpecies of ſubſtances, all which are made uſe of by reaſon, as well as the other faculties of the mind.

I therefore agree with your lordſhip, that the ideas of ſenſation or reflection is a very inſufficient diſtribution of the ideas neceſſary to reaſon. Only my agreement with your lordſhip had been more intire to the whole ſentence, if your lordſhip had rather ſaid, ideas made uſe of by reaſon; becauſe I do not well know what is meant by ideas neceſſary to reaſon. For reaſon being a faculty of the mind, nothing, in my poor opinion, can properly be ſaid to be neceſſary to that faculty, but what is required to its being. As nothing is neceſſary to ſight in a man, but ſuch a conſtitution of the body and organ, that a man may have the power of ſeeing; ſo I ſubmit it to your lordſhip, whether any thing can properly be ſaid ſaid to be neceſſary to reaſon in a man, but ſuch a conſtitution of body or mind, or both, as may give him the power of reaſoning. Indeed ſuch a particular ſort of objects or inſtruments may be ſometimes ſaid to be neceſſary to the eye, but it is never ſaid in reference to the faculty of ſeeing, but in reference to ſome particular end of ſeeing; and then a microſcope and a mite may be neceſſary to the eye, if the end propoſed be to know the ſhape and parts of that animal. And ſo if a man would reaſon about ſubſtance, then the idea of ſubſtance is neceſſary to his reaſon: but yet I doubt not but that many a rational creature has been, who, in all his life, never bethought himſelf of any neceſſity his reaſon had of an idea of ſubſtance.

Your lordſhip's next words are; "for beſides theſe, "there muſt be ſome general ideas which the mind doth "form, not by mere comparing thoſe ideas it has got "from ſenſe or reflection, but by forming diſtinct "general notions of things from particular ideas."

Here, again, I perfectly agree with your lordſhip, that beſides the particular ideas received from ſenſation and reflection, the mind "forms general ideas, not by mere "comparing thoſe ideas it has got by ſenſation and re-"flection;" for this I do not remember I ever ſaid. But this I ſay, "ideas become general, by "ſeparating from them the circumſtances "of time and place, and any other ideas "that may determine them to this or that particular "exiſtence. By this way of abſtraction they are made, "&c." And to the ſame purpoſe I explain myſelf in another place.

B. iii. c. 3. § 6.

B. i. c. 11. § 9.

Your lordſhip ſays, "the mind forms general ideas, "by forming general notions of things from particular "ideas." And I ſay, "the mind forms general ideas, "abſtracting from particular ones." So that there is no difference that I perceive between us in this matter, but only a little in expreſſion.

It follows, "and amongſt theſe general notions, or "rational ideas, ſubſtance is one of the firſt; becauſe "we find, that we can have no true conceptions of any "modes

" modes or accidents (no matter which) but we must " conceive a substratum, or subject wherein they are. " Since it is a repugnancy to our first conceptions of " things, that modes or accidents should subsist by " themselves; and therefore the rational idea of sub- " stance is one of the first and most natural ideas in our " minds."

Whether the general idea of substance be one of the first or most natural ideas in our minds, I will not dispute with your lordship, as not being, I think, very material to the matter in hand. But as to the idea of substance, what it is, and how we come by it, your lordship says, " it is a repugnancy to our conceptions of " things, that modes and accidents should subsist by " themselves; and therefore we must conceive a substra- " tum wherein they are."

And, I say, " because we cannot con- " ceive how simple ideas of sensible quali- " ties should subsist alone, or one in an- " other, we suppose them existing in, and supported " by, some common subject." Which I, with your lordship, call also substratum. B. ii. c. 23. § 4. § 1.

What can be more consonant to itself, than what your lordship and I have said in these two passages is consonant to one another? Whereupon, my lord, give me leave, I beseech you, to boast to the world, that what I have said concerning our general idea of substance, and the way how we come by it, has the honour to be confirmed by your lordship's authority. And that from hence I may be sure the saying, [that the general idea we have of substance is, that it is a substratum or support to modes or accidents, wherein they do subsist: and that the mind forms it, because it cannot conceive how they should subsist of themselves,] has no objection in it against the Trinity; for then your lordship will not, I know, be of that opinion, nor own it in a chapter where you are answering objections against the Trinity; however my words, which amount to no more, have been (I know not how) brought into that chapter: though what they have to do there, I must confess to your lordship, I do not yet see.

In

In the next words your lordſhip ſays, " but we are " ſtill told, that our underſtanding can have no other " ideas, but either from ſenſation or reflection."

The words of that ſection your lordſhip quotes, are theſe: " the underſtanding ſeems to me, B. ii. c. 1. § 5. " not to have the leaſt glimmering of any " ideas, which it doth not receive from one " of theſe two. External objects furniſh the mind " with the ideas of ſenſible qualities, which are all thoſe " different perceptions they produce in us: and the " mind furniſhes the underſtanding with ideas of its " own operations. Theſe, when we have taken a full " ſurvey of them, and their ſeveral modes, and the " compoſitions made out of them, we ſhall find to con- " tain all our own ſtock of ideas; and that we have no- " thing in our minds which did not come in one of thoſe " two ways. Let any one examine his own thoughts, " and thoroughly ſearch into his own underſtanding, " and then let him tell me, whether all the original " ideas he has there, are any other than of the objects " of his ſenſes, or of the operations of his mind, con- " ſidered as objects of his reflection: and how great a " maſs of knowledge ſoever he imagines to be lodged " there, he will, upon taking a ſtrict view, ſee, that he " has not any idea in his mind but what one of theſe " two have imprinted, though, perhaps, with infinite " variety compounded and enlarged by the underſtand- " ing, as we ſhall ſee hereafter."

Theſe words ſeem to me to ſignify ſomething diffe- rent from what your lordſhip has cited out of them; and if they do not, were intended, I am ſure, by me, to ſignify all thoſe complex ideas of modes, relations, and ſpecific ſubſtances, which how the mind itſelf forms out of ſimple ideas, I have ſhowed in the following part of my book; and intended to refer to it by theſe words, " as we ſhall ſee hereafter," with which I cloſe that paragraph. But if by ideas your lordſhip ſignifies ſimple ideas, in the words you have ſet down, I grant then they contain my ſenſe, viz. " that our underſtandings can " have (that is, in the natural exerciſe of our faculties) " no

" no other simple ideas, but either from sensation or " reflection."

Your lordship goes on: " and [we are still told] that " herein chiefly lies the excellency of mankind above " brutes, that these cannot abstract and enlarge ideas, " as men do."

Had your lordship done me the favour to have quoted the place in my book, from whence you had taken these words, I should not have been at a loss to find them. Those in my book, which I can remember any where come nearest to them, run thus:

" This, I think, I may be positive in, that the " power of abstracting is not at all in brutes; and that " the having of general ideas is that which puts a perfect " distinction betwixt man and brutes; and " is an excellency which the faculties of " brutes do by no means attain to." B. ii. c. 11. § 10.

Though, speaking of the faculties of the human understanding, I took occasion, by the by, to conjecture how far brutes partook with men in any of the intellectual faculties; yet it never entered into my thoughts, on that occasion, to compare the utmost perfections of human nature with that of brutes, and therefore was far from saying, " herein chiefly lies the excellency of " mankind above brutes, that these cannot abstract " and enlarge their ideas, as men do." For it seems to me an absurdity I would not willingly be guilty of, to say, that " the excellency of mankind lies chiefly, or " any ways in this, that brutes cannot abstract." For brutes not being able to do any thing, cannot be any excellency of mankind. The ability of mankind does not lie in the impotency or disabilities of brutes. If your lordship had charged me to have said, that herein lies one excellency of mankind above brutes, viz. that men can, and brutes cannot abstract; I must have owned it to be my sense: but what I ought to say to what your lordship approved or disapproved of in it, I shall better understand, when I know to what purpose your lordship was pleased to cite it.

The immediately following paragraph runs thus: " but how comes the general idea of substance to be " framed " framed in our minds?" Is this by " abſtracting and " enlarging ſimple ideas?" no, " but it " is by a complication of many ſimple ideas " together: becauſe not imagining how " theſe ſimple ideas can ſubſiſt by themſelves, we " accuſtom ourſelves to ſuppoſe ſome ſubſtratum " wherein they do ſubſiſt, and from whence they do " reſult, which therefore we call ſubſtance." And is this all indeed, that is to be ſaid for the being of ſubſtance, " that we accuſtom ourſelves to ſuppoſe a " ſubſtratum?" Is that cuſtom grounded upon true reaſon, or not? If not, then accidents or modes muſt " ſubſiſt of themſelves, and theſe ſimple ideas need no " tortoiſe to ſupport them: for figures and colours, " &c. would do well enough of themſelves, but for " ſome fancies men have accuſtomed themſelves to."

B. ii. c. 23. § 4.

Herein your lordſhip ſeems to charge me with two faults: one, that I make " the general idea of ſubſtance " to be framed, not by abſtracting and enlarging ſimple " ideas, but by a complication of many ſimple ideas " together:" the other, as if I had ſaid, the being of ſubſtance had no other foundation but the fancies of men.

As to the firſt of theſe, I beg leave to remind your lordſhip, that I ſay in more places than one, and particularly thoſe above quoted, where ex profeſſo I treat of abſtraction and general ideas, that they are all made by abſtracting; and therefore could not be underſtood to mean, that that of ſubſtance was made any other way; however my pen might have ſlipped, or the negligence of expreſſion, where I might have ſomething elſe than the general idea of ſubſtance in view, make me ſeem to ſay ſo.

That I was not ſpeaking of the general idea of ſubſtance in the paſſage your lordſhip quotes, is manifeſt from the title of that chapter, which is, "'of the com-" plex ideas of ſubſtance." And the firſt ſection of it, which your lordſhip cites for thoſe words you have ſet down, ſtands thus:

B. ii. c. 23. § 1.

" The mind being, as I have declared, " furniſhed with a great number of the " ſimple

" simple ideas conveyed in by the senses, as they are " found in exteriour things, or by reflections on its own " operations; takes notice also, that a certain number " of these simple ideas go constantly together; which " being presumed to belong to one thing, and words " being suited to common apprehension, and made use " of for quick dispatch, are called, so united in one " subject, by one name; which, by inadvertency, we " are apt afterward to talk of, and consider as one simple " idea, which indeed is a complication of many ideas " together: because, as I have said, not imagining how " these simple ideas can subsist by themselves, we ac- " custom ourselves to suppose some substratum, wherein " they do subsist, and from which they do result; which " therefore we call substance."

In which words, I do not observe any that deny the general idea of substance to be made by abstraction; nor any that say, " it is made by a complication of many " simple ideas together." But speaking in that place of the ideas of distinct substances, such as man, horse, gold, &c. I say they are made up of certain combinations of simple ideas; which combinations are looked upon, each of them, as one simple idea, though they are many; and we call it by one name of substance, though made up of modes, from the custom of supposing a substratum, wherein that combination does subsist. So that in this paragraph I only give an account of the idea of distinct substances, such as oak, elephant, iron, &c. how, though they are made up of distinct complications of modes, yet they are looked on as one idea, called by one name, as making distinct sorts of substances.

But that my notion of substance in general is quite different from these, and has no such combination of simple ideas in it, is evident from the immediately following words, where I say; " the idea " of pure substance in general is only a " supposition of we know not what support " of such qualities as are capable of producing simple " ideas in us." And these two I plainly distinguish all along, particularly where I say, " whatever " therefore be the secret and abstract nature

B. ii. c. 23. § 2.

§ 6.

" of ſubſtance in general, all the ideas we have of par" ticular diſtinct ſubſtances, are nothing but ſeveral
" combinations of ſimple ideas, co-exiſting in ſuch, " though unknown, cauſe of their union, as makes the
" whole ſubſiſt of itſelf."

The other thing laid to my charge, is, as if I took the being of ſubſtance to be doubtful, or rendered it ſo by the imperfect and ill-grounded idea I have given of it. To which I beg leave to ſay, that I ground not the being, but the idea of ſubſtance, on our accuſtoming ourſelves to ſuppoſe ſome ſubſtratum; for it is of the idea alone I ſpeak there, and not of the being of ſubſtance. And having every-where affirmed and built upon it, that a man is a ſubſtance; I cannot be ſuppoſed to queſtion or doubt of the being of ſubſtance, till I can queſtion or doubt of my own being. Further I ſay, " that ſenſa-
" tion convinces us that there are ſolid
B. ii. c. 23. § 29. " extended ſubſtances; and reflection, that " there are thinking ones." So that I think the being of ſubſtance is not ſhaken by what I have ſaid: and if the idea of it ſhould be, yet (the being of things depending not on our ideas) the being of ſubſtance would not be at all ſhaken by my ſaying, we had but an obſcure imperfect idea of it, and that that idea came from our accuſtoming ourſelves to ſuppoſe ſome ſubſtratum; or indeed, if I ſhould ſay, we had no idea of ſubſtance at all. For a great many things may be and are granted to have a being, and be in nature, of which we have no ideas. For example; it cannot be doubted but there are diſtinct ſpecies of ſeparate ſpirits, of which we have no diſtinct ideas at all: it cannot be queſtioned but ſpirits have ways of communicating their thoughts, and yet we have no idea of it at all.

The being then of ſubſtance being ſafe and ſecure, notwithſtanding any thing I have ſaid, let us ſee whether the idea of it be not ſo too. Your lordſhip aſks, with concern, " and is this all indeed that is to be ſaid
" for the being" (if your lordſhip pleaſe, let it be the idea) " of ſubſtance, that we accuſtom ourſelves to
" ſuppoſe a ſubſtratum? Is that cuſtom grounded

" upon true reason, or no?" I have said, that it is grounded upon this, " that we can- B. ii. c. 23. § 4.
" not conceive how simple ideas of sensible " qualities should subsist alone, and therefore we suppose
" them to exist in, and to be supported by, some com" mon subject, which support we denote by the name
" substance." Which I think is a true reason, because it is the same your lordship grounds the supposition of a substratum on, in this very page; even on " repugnancy " to our conceptions, that modes and accidents should " subsist by themselves." So that I have the good luck here again to agree with your lordship: and consequently conclude, I have your approbation in this, that the substratum to modes or accidents, which is our idea of substance in general, is founded in this, " that " we cannot conceive how modes or accidents can " subsist by themselves."

The words next following, are: " if it be grounded " upon plain and evident reason, then we must allow an " idea of substance, which comes not in by sensation or " reflection; and so we may be certain of something " which we have not by those ideas."

These words of your lordship's contain nothing, that I see in them, against me: for I never said that the general idea of substance comes in by sensation and reflection; or, that it is a simple idea of sensation or reflection, though it be ultimately founded in them: for it is a complex idea, made up of the general idea of something, or being, with the relation of a support to accidents. For general ideas come not into the mind by sensation or reflection, but are the creatures or inventions of the understanding, as, I think, I have shown; and also, how the mind makes B. iii. c. 3. them from ideas, which it has got by sensation and reflection: and as to the ideas of relation, how the mind forms them, and how they are derived from, B. ii. c. 25. and ultimately terminate in, ideas of sensa- & c. 28. § 18. tion and reflection, I have likewise shown.

But that I may not be mistaken what I mean, when I speak of ideas of sensation and reflection, as the materials of all our knowledge; give me leave, my lord, to ſet down a place or two out of my book, to explain myſelf; as, I thus ſpeak of ideas of ſenſation and reflection:

B. ii. c. 1. § 5. "That theſe, when we have taken a full "ſurvey of them, and their ſeveral modes, "and the compoſitions made out of them, "we ſhall find to contain all our whole ſtock of ideas; "and we have nothing in our minds, which did not "come in one of thoſe two ways." This thought, in another place, I expreſs thus:

B. ii. c. 2. § 2. "Theſe ſimple ideas, the materials of all "our knowledge, are ſuggeſted and fur- "niſhed to the mind only by theſe two ways "above-mentioned, viz. ſenſation and reflection." And again,

B. ii. c. 7. § 10. "Theſe are the moſt conſiderable of "thoſe ſimple ideas which the mind has, "and out of which is made all its other "knowledge; all which it receives by the two fore- "mentioned ways of ſenſation and reflection." And,

B. ii. c. 21. §. 73. "Thus I have, in a ſhort draught, given "a view of our original ideas, from whence "all the reſt are derived, and of which "they are made up."

This, and the like ſaid in other places, is what I have thought concerning ideas of ſenſation and reflection, as the foundation and materials of all our ideas, and conſequently of all our knowledge. I have ſet down theſe particulars out of my book, that the reader, having a full view of my opinion herein, may the better ſee what in it is liable to your lordſhip's reprehenſion. For that your lordſhip is not very well ſatisfied with it, appears not only by the words under conſideration, but by theſe alſo: "But we are ſtill told, that our underſtanding can "have no other ideas, but either from ſenſation or "reflection. And, let us ſuppoſe this principle to be "true, that the ſimple ideas, by ſenſation or reflection, "are the ſole matter and foundation of all our rea- "ſoning."

Your lordſhip's argument, in the paſſage we are upon, ſtands thus: "If the general idea of ſubſtance be "grounded

" grounded upon plain and evident reason, then we " must allow an idea of substance, which comes not in " by sensation or reflection:" This is a consequence which, with submission, I think will not hold, because it is founded on a supposition which, I think, will not hold, viz. that reason and ideas are inconsistent; for if that supposition be not true, then the general idea of substance may be grounded on plain and evident reason: and yet it will not follow from thence, that it is not ultimately grounded on, and derived from, ideas which come in by sensation or reflection, and so cannot be said to come in by sensation or reflection.

To explain myself, and clear my meaning in this matter: all the ideas of all the sensible qualities of a cherry, come into my mind by sensation; the ideas of perceiving, thinking, reasoning, knowing, &c. come into my mind by reflection: the ideas of these qualities and actions, or powers, are perceived by the mind to be by themselves inconsistent with existence; or, as your lordship well expresses it, " we find that we can have " no true conception of any modes or accidents, but we " must conceive a substratum or subject, wherein they " are;" i. e. that they cannot exist or subsist of themselves. Hence the mind perceives their necessary connexion with inherence or being supported; which being a relative idea superadded to the red colour in a cherry, or to thinking in a man, the mind frames the correlative idea of a support. For I never denied, that the mind could frame to itself ideas of relation, but have showed the quite contrary in my chapters about relation. But because a relation cannot be founded in nothing, or be the relation of nothing, and the thing here related as a supporter or support, is not represented to the mind by any clear and distinct idea; therefore the obscure, indistinct, vague idea of thing or something, is all that is left to be the positive idea, which has the relation of a support or substratum to modes or accidents; and that general indetermined idea of something, is, by the abstraction of the mind, derived also from the simple ideas of sensation and reflection: and thus the mind from the positive, simple ideas got by sensation or reflection, comes to the general relative idea of ſubſtance; which, without the poſitive ſimple ideas, it would never have.

This your lordſhip (without giving by retail all the particular ſteps of the mind in this buſineſs) has well expreſſed in this more familiar way:

"We find we can have no true conception of any "modes or accidents, but we muſt conceive a ſubſtra-"tum or ſubject wherein they are; ſince it is a repug-"nancy to our conceptions of things, that modes or "accidents ſhould ſubſiſt by themſelves."

Hence your lordſhip calls it the rational idea of ſubſtance: and ſays, "I grant that by ſenſation and re-"flection we come to know the powers and properties "of things; but our reaſon is ſatisfied that there muſt "be ſomething beyond theſe, becauſe it is impoſſible "that they ſhould ſubſiſt by themſelves." So that if this be that which your lordſhip means by the rational idea of ſubſtance, I ſee nothing there is in it againſt what I have ſaid, that it is founded on ſimple ideas of ſenſation or reflection, and that it is a very obſcure idea.

Your lordſhip's concluſion from your foregoing words, is, "and ſo we may be certain of ſome things "which we have not by thoſe ideas:" which is a propoſition, whoſe preciſe meaning your lordſhip will forgive me if I profeſs, as it ſtands there, I do not underſtand. For it is uncertain to me, whether your lordſhip means, we may certainly know the exiſtence of ſomething which we have not by thoſe ideas; or certainly know the diſtinct properties of ſomething which we have not by thoſe ideas; or certainly know the truth of ſome propoſition which we have not by thoſe ideas: for to be certain of ſomething, may ſignify either of theſe. But in which ſoever of theſe it be meant, I do not ſee how I am concerned in it.

Your lordſhip's next paragraph is as followeth:

"The idea of ſubſtance, we are told again, is no-"thing but the ſuppoſed, but unknown ſupport of "thoſe qualities we find exiſting, which we imagine "cannot ſubſiſt, ſine re ſubſtante; which, according to "the true import of the word, is in plain Engliſh "ſtanding

" ſtanding under or upholding. But very little weight " is to be laid upon a bare grammatical etymology, " when the word is uſed in another ſenſe by the beſt " authors, ſuch as Cicero and Quintilian; who take " ſubſtance for the ſame as eſſence, as Valla hath " proved; and ſo the Greek word imports: but Boe- " thius, in tranſlating Ariſtotle's Predicaments, rather " choſe the word ſubſtance, as more proper to expreſs a " compound being, and reſerved eſſence for what was " ſimple and immaterial. And in this ſenſe, ſubſtance " was not applied to God, but only eſſence, as St. " Auguſtine obſerves."

Your lordſhip here ſeems to diſlike my taking notice, that the derivation of the word ſubſtance favours the idea we have of it: and your lordſhip tells me, " that " very little weight is to be laid on a bare grammatical " etymology." Though little weight were to be laid on it, if there were nothing elſe to be ſaid for it; yet when it was brought to confirm an idea which your lordſhip allows of, nay, calls a rational idea, and ſays is founded in evident reaſon, I do not ſee what your lordſhip had to blame in it. For though Cicero and Quintilian take ſubſtantia for the ſame with eſſence, as your lordſhip ſays; or for riches and eſtate, as I think they alſo do; yet I ſuppoſe it will be true, that ſubſtantia is derived à ſubſtando, and that that ſhows the original import of the word. For, my lord, I have been long of opinion, as may be ſeen in my book, that if we knew the original of all the words we meet with, we ſhould thereby be very much helped to know the ideas they were firſt applied to and made to ſtand for; and therefore I muſt beg your lordſhip to excuſe this conceit of mine, this etymological obſervation eſpecially, ſince it hath nothing in it againſt the truth, nor againſt your lordſhip's idea of ſubſtance.

But your lordſhip oppoſes to this etymology the uſe of the word ſubſtance by the beſt authors in another ſenſe; and thereupon give the world a learned account of the uſe of the word ſubſtance, in a ſenſe wherein it is not taken for the ſubſtratum of accidents: however, I think it a ſufficient juſtification of myſelf to your lordſhip, that I uſe it in the ſame ſenſe your lordſhip does, and that your lordſhip thinks not fit to govern yourſelf by thoſe authorities; for then your lordſhip could not apply the word ſubſtance to God, as Boethius did not, and as your lordſhip has proved out of St. Auguſtine, that it was not applied. Though I gueſs it is the conſideration of ſubſtance, as it is applied to God, that brings it into your lordſhip's preſent diſcourſe. But if your lordſhip and I (if without preſumption I may join myſelf with you) have, in the uſe of the word ſubſtance, quitted the example of the beſt authors, I think the authority of the ſchools, which has a long time been allowed in philoſophical terms, will bear us out in this matter.

In the remaining part of this paragraph it follows: "but afterwards the names of ſubſtance and eſſence "were promiſcuouſly uſed, with reſpect to God and his "creatures; and do imply that which makes the real "being, as diſtinguiſhed from modes and properties. "And ſo the ſubſtance and eſſence of a man are the "ſame; not being taken for the individual ſubſtance, "which cannot be underſtood without particular modes "and properties; but the general ſubſtance or nature "of man, abſtractedly from all the circumſtances of "perſon."

Here your lordſhip makes theſe terms general ſubſtance, nature, and eſſence, to ſignify the ſame thing; how properly I ſhall not here inquire. Your lordſhip goes on.

"And I deſire to know, whether according to true "reaſon, that be not a clear idea of man; not of Peter, "James, or John, but of a man as ſuch."

This, I think, nobody denies: nor can any body deny it, who will not ſay, that the general abſtract idea which he has in his mind of a ſort or ſpecies of animals that he calls man, ought not to have that general name man applied to it: for that is all (as I humbly conceive) which theſe words of your lordſhip here amount to.

"This, your lordſhip ſays, is not a mere univerſal "name, or mark, or ſign." Your lordſhip ſays it is an idea, and every body muſt grant it to be an idea; and therefore therefore it is, in my opinion, ſafe enough from being thought a mere name, or mark, or ſign of that idea. For he muſt think very oddly, who takes the general name of any idea, to be the general idea itſelf: it is a mere mark or ſign of it without doubt, and nothing elſe. Your lordſhip adds:

" But there is as clear and diſtinct a conception of " this in our minds, as we can have from any ſuch " ſimple ideas as are conveyed by our ſenſes."

If your lordſhip means by this, (as the words ſeem to me to import) that we can have as clear and diſtinct an idea of the general ſubſtance, or nature, or eſſence of the ſpecies man, as we have of the particular colour and figure of a man when we look on him, or of his voice when we hear him ſpeak, I muſt crave leave to diſſent from your lordſhip. Becauſe the idea we have of the ſubſtance, wherein the properties of a man do inhere, is a very obſcure idea: ſo in that part, our general idea of man is obſcure and confuſed: as alſo, how that ſubſtance is differently modified in the different ſpecies of creatures, ſo as to have different properties and powers whereby they are diſtinguiſhed, that alſo we have very obſcure, or rather no diſtinct ideas of at all. But there is no obſcurity or confuſion at all in the idea of a figure that I clearly ſee, or of a ſound that I diſtinctly hear; and ſuch are, or may be, the ideas that are conveyed in by ſenſation or reflection. It follows:

" I do not deny that the diſtinction of particular " ſubſtances, is by the ſeveral modes and properties of " them, (which they may call a complication of ſimple " ideas if they pleaſe); but I do aſſert, that the general " idea which relates to the eſſence, without theſe, is ſo " juſt and true an idea, that without it the complication " of ſimple ideas will never give us a right notion of " it."

Here, I think, that your lordſhip aſſerts, " that the " general idea of the real eſſence (for ſo I underſtand " general idea which relates to the eſſence) without the " modes and properties, is a juſt and true idea." For example; the real eſſence of a thing is that internal conſtitution on which the properties of that thing depend.

Now

Now your lordſhip ſeems to me to acknowledge, that that internal conſtitution or eſſence we cannot know; for your lordſhip ſays, "that from the powers and pro-"perties of things which are knowable by us, we may "know as much of the internal eſſence of things, as "theſe powers and properties diſcover." That is unqueſtionably ſo; but if thoſe powers and properties diſcover no more of thoſe internal eſſences, but that there are internal eſſences, we ſhall know only that there are internal eſſences, but ſhall have no idea or conception at all of what they are; as your lordſhip ſeems to confeſs in the next words of the ſame page, where you add: "I do not ſay, that we can know all eſſences "of things alike, nor that we can attain to a perfect "underſtanding of all that belong to them; but if we "can know ſo much, as that there are certain beings in "the world, endued with ſuch diſtinct powers and pro-"perties, what is it we complain of the want of?" Wherein your lordſhip ſeems to terminate our knowledge of thoſe internal eſſences in this, "that there are cer-"tain beings indued with diſtinct powers and proper-"ties." But what theſe beings, theſe internal eſſences are, that we have no diſtinct conceptions of; as your lordſhip confeſſes yet plainer a little after, in theſe words: for "although we cannot comprehend the in-"ternal frame and conſtitution of things." So that we having, as is confeſſed, no idea of what this eſſence, this internal conſtitution of things on which their properties depend, is; how can we ſay it is any way a juſt and true idea? But your lordſhip ſays, "it is ſo juſt and true "an idea, that without it the contemplation of ſimple "ideas will never give us a right notion of it." All the idea we have of it, which is only that there is an internal, though unknown conſtitution of things on which their properties depend, ſimple ideas of ſenſation and reflection, and the contemplation of them, have alone helped us to; and becauſe they can help us no further, that is the reaſon we have no perfecter notion of it.

That which your lordſhip ſeems to me principally to drive at, in this and the foregoing paragraph, is, to aſſert, that the general ſubſtance of man, and ſo of any other other ſpecies, is that which makes the real being of that ſpecies abſtractly from the individuals of that ſpecies. By general ſubſtance here, I ſuppoſe, your lordſhip means the general idea of ſubſtance: and that which induces me to take the liberty to ſuppoſe ſo, is, that I think your lordſhip is here diſcourſing of the idea of ſubſtance, and how we come by it. And if your lordſhip ſhould mean otherwiſe, I muſt take the liberty to deny there is any ſuch thing in rerum natura, as a general ſubſtance that exiſts itſelf, or makes any thing.

Taking it then for granted that your lordſhip ſays, that this is the general idea of ſubſtance, viz. "that it "is that which makes the real being of any thing;" your lordſhip ſays, "that it is as clear and diſtinct a "conception in our minds, as we can have from any "ſuch ſimple ideas as are conveyed by our ſenſes." Here I muſt crave leave to diſſent from your lordſhip. Your lordſhip ſays in the former part of this page, "that ſubſtance and eſſence do imply that which makes "the real being." Now what, I beſeech your lordſhip, do theſe words, that which, here ſignify more than ſomething? And the idea expreſſed by ſomething, I am apt to think, your lordſhip will not ſay is as clear and diſtinct a conception or idea in the mind, as the idea of the red colour of a cherry, or the bitter taſte of wormwood, or the figure of a circle brought into the mind by your ſenſes.

Your lordſhip farther ſays, "it makes" (whereby, I ſuppoſe, your lordſhip means, conſtitutes or is) "the "real being, as diſtinguiſhed from modes and pro-"perties."

For example, my lord, ſtrip this ſuppoſed general idea of a man or gold of all its modes and properties, and then tell me whether your lordſhip has as clear and diſtinct an idea of what remains, as you have of the figure of the one, or the yellow colour of the other. I muſt confeſs the remaining ſomething, to me affords ſo vague, confuſed and obſcure an idea, that I cannot ſay I have any diſtinct conception of it; for barely by being ſomething, it is not in my mind clearly diſtinguiſhed from the figure or voice of a man, or the colour or taſte of a cherry, cherry, for they are ſomething too. If your lordſhip has a clear and diſtinct idea of that " ſomething, which " makes the real being as diſtinguiſhed from all its " modes and properties," your lordſhip muſt enjoy the privilege of the ſight and clear ideas you have: nor can you be denied them, becauſe I have not the like; the dimneſs of my conceptions muſt not pretend to hinder the clearneſs of your lordſhip's, any more than the want of them in a blind man can debar your lordſhip of the clear and diſtinct ideas of colours. The obſcurity I find in my own mind, when I examine what poſitive, general, ſimple idea of ſubſtance I have, is ſuch as I profeſs, and further than that I cannot go: but what, and how clear it is in the underſtanding of a ſeraphim, or of an elevated mind, that I cannot determine. Your lordſhip goes on.

" I muſt do that right to the ingenious author of the " Eſſay of Human Underſtanding (from whence theſe " notions are borrowed to ſerve other purpoſes than he " intended them) that he makes the caſe of ſpiritual and " corporeal ſubſtances to be alike, as to their ideas. " And that we have as clear a notion of a ſpirit, as we " have of a body; the one being ſuppoſed to be the " ſubſtratum to thoſe ſimple ideas we have from with- " out, and the other of thoſe operations we find within " ourſelves. And that it is as rational to affirm, there " is no body, becauſe we cannot know its eſſence, as it " is called, or have no idea of the ſubſtance of matter; " as to ſay there is no ſpirit, becauſe we know not its " eſſence, or have no idea of a ſpiritual ſubſtance."

" From hence it follows, that we may be certain that " there are both ſpiritual and bodily ſubſtances, although " we can have no clear and diſtinct ideas of them. But " if our reaſon depend upon our clear and diſtinct ideas, " how is this poſſible? We cannot reaſon without " clear ideas, and yet we may be certain without them: " can we be certain without reaſon? Or, doth our " reaſon give us true notions of things, without theſe " ideas? If it be ſo, this new hypotheſis about reaſon " muſt appear to be very unreaſonable."

That

That which your lordship seems to argue here, is, that we may be certain without clear and distinct ideas. Who your lordship here argues against, under the title of this new hypothesis about reason, I confess I do not know. For I do not remember that I have any where placed certainty only in clear and distinct ideas, but in the clear and visible connexion of any of our ideas, be those ideas what they will; as will appear to any one who will look into B. iv. c. 4. § 18. and B. iv. c. 6. § 3. of my Essay, in the latter of which he will find these words: "certainty of knowledge is to perceive the "agreement or disagreement of ideas, as expressed in "any proposition." As in the proposition your lordship mentions, v. g. that we may be certain there are spiritual and bodily substances; or, that bodily substances do exist, is a proposition of whose truth we may be certain; and so of spiritual substances. Let us now examine wherein the certainty of these propositions consists.

First, as to the existence of bodily substances, I know by my senses that something extended, and solid, and figured does exist; for my senses are the utmost evidence and certainty I have of the existence of extended, solid, figured things. These modes being then known to exist by our senses, the existence of them (which I cannot conceive can subsist without something to support them) makes me see the connexion of those ideas with a support, or, as it is called, a subject of inhesion, and so consequently the connexion of that support (which cannot be nothing) with existence. And thus I come by a certainty of the existence of that something which is a support of those sensible modes, though I have but a very confused, loose, and undetermined idea of it, signified by the same substance. After the same manner experimenting thinking in myself, by the existence of thought in me, to which something that thinks is evidently and necessarily connected in my mind; I come to be certain that there exists in me something that thinks, though of that something which I call substance also, I have but a very obscure imperfect idea.

Before I go any farther, it is fit I return my acknowledgements to your lordſhip, for the good opinion you are pleaſed here to expreſs of the "author of the Eſſay "of Human Underſtanding," and that you do not impute to him the ill uſe ſome may have made of his notions. But he craves leave to ſay, that he ſhould have been better preſerved from the hard and ſiniſter thoughts, which ſome men are always ready for, if in what you have here publiſhed, your lordſhip had been pleaſed to have ſhown where you directed your diſcourſe againſt him, and where againſt others, from p. 234. to p. 262. of your Vindication of the Trinity. For nothing but my book and my words being quoted, the world will be apt to think that I am the perſon who argue againſt the Trinity, and deny myſteries, againſt whom your lordſhip directs thoſe pages. And indeed, my lord, though I have read them over with great attention, yet, in many places, I cannot diſcern whether it be againſt me or any body elſe, that your lordſhip is arguing. That which often makes the difficulty is, that I do not ſee how what I ſay does at all concern the controverſy your lordſhip is engaged in, and yet I alone am quoted. Your lordſhip goes on:

"Let us ſuppoſe this principle to be true," that the ſimple ideas by ſenſation or reflection are the ſole matter and foundation of all our reaſoning: "I aſk then how "we come to be certain, that there are ſpiritual ſub-"ſtances in the world, ſince we can have no clear and "diſtinct ideas concerning them? Can we be certain, "without any foundation of reaſon? This is a new "ſort of certainty, for which we do not envy thoſe pre-"tenders to reaſon. But methinks, they ſhould not at "the ſame time aſſert the abſolute neceſſity of theſe "ideas to our knowledge, and declare that we may "have certain knowledge without them. If there be "any other method, they overthrow their own prin-"ciple; if there be none, how come they to any cer-"tainty that there are both bodily and ſpiritual ſub-"ſtances?"

This paragraph, which continues to prove, that we may have certainty without clear and diſtinct ideas, I would would flatter myself is not meant against me, because it opposes nothing that I have said; and so shall not say any thing to it, but only set it down to do your lordship right, that the reader may judge. Though I do not find how he will easily overlook me, and think I am not at all concerned in it, since my words alone are quoted in several pages immediately preceding and following: and in the very next paragraph it is said, "how they come to know; which word, they, must signify some body besides the author of Christianity not mysterious; and then I think, by the whole tenour of your lordship's discourse, nobody will be left but me, possible to be taken to be the other: for in the same paragraph your lordship says, "the same persons say, that notwithstanding their ideas, it is possible for matter to think."

I know not what other person says so but I; but if any one does, I am sure no person but I say so in my book, which your lordship has quoted for them, viz. Human Understanding, B. iv. c. 3. This, which is a riddle to me, the more amazes me, because I find it in a treatise of your lordship's, who so perfectly understands the rules and methods of writing, whether in controversy or any other way. But this which seems wholly new to me, I shall better understand when your lordship pleases to explain it. In the mean time I mention it as an apology for myself, if sometimes I mistake your lordship's aim, and so misapply my answer. What follows in your lordship's next paragraph is this:

"As to these latter (which is my business) I must "inquire farther, how they come to know there are "such? The answer is, by self-reflection on those "powers we find in ourselves, which cannot come from "a mere bodily substance. I allow the reason to be "very good; but the question I ask, is, whether this "argument be from the clear and distinct idea or not? "We have ideas in ourselves of the several operations "of our minds, of knowing, willing, considering, &c. "which cannot come from a bodily substance. Very "true; but is all this contained in the simple idea of "these operations? How can that be, when the same "persons say, that, notwithstanding their ideas, it is possible

Human Understanding, B. ii. c. 3. § 6.

" poſſible for matter to think? For it is " ſaid—that we have the ideas of matter " and thinking, but poſſibly ſhall never be " able to know whether any material being " thinks or not; it being impoſſible for us, " by the contemplation of our own ideas, without re- " velation, to diſcover whether omnipotency hath not " given to ſome ſyſtems of matter, fitly diſpoſed, a " power to perceive or think.—If this be true, then for " all that we can know by our ideas of matter and " thinking, matter may have a power of thinking: and " if this hold, then it is impoſſible to prove a ſpiritual " ſubſtance in us, from the idea of thinking: for how " can we be aſſured by our ideas, that God hath not " given ſuch a power of thinking to matter ſo diſpoſed " as our bodies are? Eſpecially ſince it is ſaid,—that " in reſpect of our notions, it is not much more remote " from our comprehenſion to conceive that God can, " if he pleaſes, ſuper-add to our idea of matter a faculty " of thinking, than that he ſhould ſuper-add to it an- " other ſubſtance, with a faculty of thinking.—Who- " ever aſſerts this can never prove a ſpiritual ſubſtance " in us from a faculty of thinking; becauſe he cannot " know from the idea of matter and thinking, that " matter ſo diſpoſed cannot think. And he cannot be " certain, that God hath not framed the matter of our " bodies ſo as to be capable of it."

Theſe words, my lord, I am forced to take to myſelf, for though your lordſhip has put it the ſame perſons ſay, in the plural number, yet there is no body quoted for the following words, but my Eſſay; nor do I think any body but I has ſaid ſo. But ſo it is in this preſent chapter, I have the good luck to be joined with others for what I do not ſay, and others with me for what I imagine they do not ſay; which, how it came about, your lordſhip can beſt reſolve. But to the words themſelves: in them your lordſhip argues, that upon my principles it " cannot be proved that there is a ſpiritual " ſubſtance in us." To which give me leave, with ſubmiſſion, to ſay, that I think it may be proved from my principles, and I think I have done it; and the proof in my book stands thus: First, we experiment in ourselves thinking. The idea of this action or mode of thinking is inconsistent with the idea of self-subsistence, and therefore has a necessary connexion with a support or subject of inhesion: the idea of that support is what we call substance; and so from thinking experimented in us, we have a proof of a thinking substance in us, which in my sense is a spirit. Against this your lordship will argue, that by what I have said of the possibility that God may, if he pleases, super-add to matter a faculty of thinking, it can never be proved that there is a spiritual substance in us, because upon that supposition it is possible it may be a material substance that thinks in us. I grant it; but add, that the general idea of substance being the same every where, the modification of thinking, or the power of thinking joined to it, makes it a spirit, without considering what other modifications it has, as whether it has the modification of solidity or no. As on the other side, substance, that has the modification or solidity, is matter, whether it has the modification of thinking or no. And therefore, if your lordship means by a spiritual an immaterial substance, I grant I have not proved, nor upon my principles can it be proved, (your lordship meaning, as I think you do, demonstratively proved) that there is an immaterial substance in us that thinks. Though I presume, from what I have said about the supposition of a system of matter thinking (which there demonstrates that God is immaterial) will prove it in the highest degree probable, that the thinking substance in us is immaterial. But your lordship thinks not probability enough; and by charging the want of demonstration upon my principles, that the thinking thing in us is immaterial, your lordship seems to conclude it demonstrable from principles of philosophy. That demonstration I should with joy receive from your lordship, or any one. For though all the great ends of morality and religion are well enough secured without it, as I have shown; yet it would be a great advance of our knowledge in nature and philosophy.

in

B. iv. 6. 10. § 16.

B. iv. c. 3. § 6.

To what I have ſaid in my book, to ſhow that all the great ends of religion and morality are ſecured barely by the immortality of the ſoul, without a neceſſary ſuppoſition that the ſoul is immaterial, I crave leave to add, that immortality may and ſhall be annexed to that, which in its own nature is neither immaterial nor immortal, as the apoſtle expreſsly declares in theſe words; "for 1 Cor. xv. 53. "this corruptible muſt put on incorruption, "and this mortal muſt put on immortality."

Perhaps my uſing the word ſpirit for a thinking ſubſtance, without excluding materiality out of it, will be thought too great a liberty, and ſuch as deſerves cenſure, becauſe I leave immateriality out of the idea I make it a ſign of. I readily own, that words ſhould be ſparingly ventured on in a ſenſe wholly new; and nothing but abſolute neceſſity can excuſe the boldneſs of uſing any term, in a ſenſe whereof we can produce no example. But in the preſent caſe, I think, I have great authorities to juſtify me. The ſoul is agreed, on all hands, to be that in us which thinks. And he that will look into the firſt book of Cicero's Tuſculan queſtions, and into the ſixth book of Virgil's Æneids, will find that theſe two great men, who of all the Romans beſt underſtood philoſophy, thought, or at leaſt did not deny, the ſoul to be a ſubtile matter, which might come under the name of aura, or ignis, or æther; and this ſoul they both of them called ſpiritus: in the notion of which it is plain they included only thought and active motion, without the total excluſion of matter. Whether they thought right in this, I do not ſay; that is not the queſtion; but whether they ſpoke properly, when they called an active, thinking, ſubtile ſubſtance, out of which they excluded only groſs and palpable matter, ſpiritus, ſpirit. I think that nobody will deny, that, if any among the Romans can be allowed to ſpeak properly, Tully and Virgil are the two who may moſt ſecurely be depended on for it: and one of them, ſpeaking of the ſoul, ſays, "dum "ſpiritus hos regit artus;" and the other, "vita con-"tinetur corpore & ſpiritu." Where it is plain, by corpus he means (as generally every where) only groſs matter that may be felt and handled; as appears by theſe words:

words: "si cor, aut sanguis, aut cerebrum est animus, "certe, quoniam est corpus, interibit cum reliquo cor- "pore; si anima est, forte dissipabitur; si ignis, extin- "guetur." Tusc. Quæst. l. i. c. 11. Here Cicero opposes corpus to ignis and anima, i. e. aura or breath: and the foundation of that his distinction of the soul, from that which he calls corpus or body, he gives a little lower in these words; "tanta ejus tenuitas ut fugiat "aciem." ib. c. 22.

Nor was it the heathen world alone that had this notion of spirit; the most enlightened of all the ancient people of God, Solomon himself, speaks after the same manner: "That which befalleth the sons "of men befalleth beasts, even one thing "befalleth them; as the one dieth so dieth "the other, yea they have all one spirit." So I translate the Hebrew word רוח here, for so I find it translated the very next verse but one; "Who know- "eth the spirit of a man that goeth up- "ward, and the spirit of a beast that goeth down to the "earth?" In which places it is plain that Solomon applies the word רוח, and our translators of him, the word spirit, to a substance, out of which immateriality was not wholly excluded, "unless the spirit of a beast "that goeth downwards to the earth" be immaterial. Nor did the way of speaking in our Saviour's time vary from this: St. Luke tells us, that when our Saviour, after his resurrection, stood in the midst of them, "they were affrighted, and supposed that they had seen πνεῦμα," the Greek word which always answers spirit in English; and so the translators of the Bible render it here, "they supposed "that they had seen a spirit." But our Saviour says to them, "Behold my hands and my feet, "that it is I myself, handle me and see; for "a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as you see me have." Which words of our Saviour put the same distinction between body and spirit, that Cicero did in the place above cited, viz. that the one was a gross compages that could be felt and handled; and the other such as Virgil describes the ghost or soul of Anchises,

Eccles. iii. 19.

Ver. 21.

Chap. xxiv. 37.

Ver. 39.

Lib. vi.

" Ter conatus ibi collo dare brachia circum,
" Ter fruſtra comprenſa manus effugit imago,
" Par levibus ventis volucrique ſimillima ſomno."

I would not be thought here to ſay, that ſpirit never does ſignify a purely immaterial ſubſtance. In that ſenſe the ſcripture, I take it, ſpeaks, when it ſays, " God is a ſpirit;" and in that ſenſe I have uſed it; and in that ſenſe I have proved from my principles, that there is a ſpiritual ſubſtance; and am certain that there is a ſpiritual immaterial ſubſtance: which is, I humbly conceive, a direct anſwer to your lordſhip's queſtion in the beginning of this argument, viz. " How come we " to be certain that there are ſpiritual ſubſtances, ſup- " poſing this principle to be true, that the ſimple ideas " by ſenſation and reflection are the ſole matter and " foundation of all our reaſoning?" But this hinders not, but that if God, that infinite, omnipotent, and perfectly immaterial ſpirit, ſhould pleaſe to give a ſyſtem of very ſubtile matter ſenſe and motion, it might, with propriety of ſpeech, be called ſpirit; though materiality were not excluded out of its complex idea. Your lordſhip proceeds:

B. iv. c. 10. § 5. " It is ſaid indeed elſewhere, that it is " repugnant to the idea of ſenſeleſs matter, " that it ſhould put into itſelf ſenſe, per- " ception, and knowledge. But this doth not reach " the preſent caſe; which is not what matter can do of " of itſelf, but what matter prepared by an omnipotent " hand can do. And what certainty can we have that " he hath not done it? We can have none from the " ideas, for thoſe are given up in this caſe; and conſe- " quently we can have no certainty upon theſe princi- " ples, whether we have any ſpiritual ſubſtance within " us or not."

Your lordſhip in this paragraph proves, that from what I ſay, " we can have no certainty " whether we have any ſpiritual ſubſtance " in us or not." If by ſpiritual ſubſtance your lordſhip means an immaterial ſubſtance in us, as you ſpeak a little farther on, I grant what your lordſhip ſays is true, true, that it cannot, upon these principles, be demonstrated. But I must crave leave to say at the same time, that upon these principles it can be proved, to the highest degree of probability. If by spiritual substance your lordship means a thinking substance, I must dissent from your lordship, and say, that we can have a certainty, upon my principles, that there is a spiritual substance in us. In short, my lord, upon my principles, i. e. from the idea of thinking, we can have a certainty that there is a thinking substance in us; from hence we have a certainty that there is an eternal thinking substance. This thinking substance, which has been from eternity, I have proved to be immaterial. B. iv. This eternal, immaterial, thinking substance, has put into us a thinking substance, which, whether it be a material or immaterial substance, cannot be infallibly demonstrated from our ideas; though from them it may be proved, that it is to the highest degree probable that it is immaterial. This, in short, my lord, is what I have to say on this point; which may, in good measure, serve for an answer to your lordship's next leaf or two; which I shall set down, and then take notice of some few particulars which I wonder to find your lordship accuse me of. Your lordship says:

B. iv. c. 16. § 5.

" But we are told, that from the operations of our minds, we are able to frame a complex idea of a spirit. How can that be, when we cannot from those ideas be assured, but that those operations may come from a material substance? If we frame an idea on such grounds, it is at most but a possible idea; for it may be otherwise, and we can have no assurance from our ideas, that it is not: so that the most men may come to in this way of ideas, is, that it is possible it may be so, and it is possible it may not; but that it is impossible for us, from our ideas, to determine either way. And is not this an admirable way to bring us to a certainty of reason?" B. ii. c. 23. § 15.

" I am very glad to find the idea of a spiritual substance made as consistent and intelligible, as that of a corporeal:—For as the one consists of a cohesion of

" ſolid parts, and the power of communicating motion
" by impulſe, ſo the other conſiſts in a power of think-§ 27. " ing, and willing, and moving the body; and " that the coheſion of ſolid parts, is as hard " to be conceived as thinking: and we are as much in " the dark about the power of communicating motion
" by impulſe, as in the power of exciting motion by " thought. We have by daily experience, clear evi" dence of motion produced, both by impulſe and
" by thought; but the manner how, hardly comes " within our comprehenſion; we are equally at a loſs
" in both.

§ 28. " From whence it follows, that we may " be certain of a being of a ſpiritual ſubſtance,
" although we have no clear and diſtinct idea of it, nor
" are able to comprehend the manner of its operations:
" and therefore it is a vain thing in any to pretend that " all our reaſon and certainty is founded on clear and " diſtinct ideas; and that they have reaſon to reject any " doctrine which relates to ſpiritual ſubſtances, be" cauſe they cannot comprehend the manner of it. For " the ſame thing is confeſſed by the moſt inquiſitive
" men, about the manner of operation, both in mate-§ 31. " rial and immaterial ſubſtances. It is affirm" ed,—that the very notion of body implies
" ſomething very hard, if not impoſſible, to be explained
" or underſtood by us; and that the natural conſe-
" quence of it, viz. diviſibility, involves us in difficul" ties impoſſible to be explicated, or made conſiſtent;
" that we have but ſome few ſuperficial ideas of things; § 32. " that we are deſtitute of faculties to attain " to the true nature of them; and that when " we do that, we fall preſently into darkneſs and ob-" ſcurity, and can diſcover nothing further but our own
" blindneſs and ignorance."

" Theſe are very fair and ingenuous confeſſions of the " ſhortneſs of human underſtanding, with reſpect to the " nature and manner of ſuch things which we are moſt
" certain of the being of, by conſtant and undoubted
" experience. I appeal now to the reaſon of mankind, " whether it can be any reaſonable foundation for re" jecting

" jecting a doctrine proposed to us as of divine revela" tion, because we cannot comprehend the manner of
" it; especially when it relates to the divine essence.
" For as the same author observes,—our § 33, 34, 35,
" idea of God is framed from the complex " ideas of those perfections we find in ourselves, but " enlarging them so, as to make them suitable to an " infinite being; as knowledge, power, duration, &c.
" And the degrees or extent of these which § 36.
" we ascribe to the sovereign being, are all " boundless and infinite. For it is infinity, which " joined to our ideas of existence, power, knowledge,
" &c. makes that complex idea, whereby we represent
" to ourselves, the best we can, the supreme being."

" Now, when our knowledge of gross material sub" stances is so dark; when the notion of spiritual sub" stances is above all ideas of sensation; when the higher
" any substance is, the more remote from our know" ledge; but especially when the very idea of a supreme " being implies its being infinite and incomprehensible;
" I know not whether it argues more stupidity or arro" gance to expose a doctrine relating to the divine
" essence, because they cannot comprehend the manner " of it: but of this more afterwards. I am yet upon " the certainty of our reason, from clear and distinct " ideas: and if we can attain to certainty without " them, and where it is confessed we cannot have them,
" as about substance; then these cannot be the sole " matter and foundation of our reasoning, which is
" peremptorily asserted by this late author."

Here, after having argued, that notwithstanding what I say about our idea of a spirit, it is impossible, from our ideas, to determine whether that spirit in us be a material substance or no, your lordship concludes the paragraph thus: " and is not this an admirable way to " bring us to a certainty of reason?"

I answer; I think it is a way to bring us to a certainty in these things which I have offered as certain, but I never thought it a way to certainty, where we never can reach certainty; nor shall I think the worse of it, if your lordship should instance in an hundred other things, as well as the immateriality of the ſpirit in us, wherein this way does not bring us to a certainty; unleſs, at the ſame time, your lordſhip ſhall ſhow us another way that will bring us to a certainty in thoſe points, wherein this way of ideas failed. If your lordſhip, or any body elſe, will ſhow me a better way to a certainty in them, I am ready to learn, and will lay by that of ideas. The way of ideas will not, from philoſophy, afford us a demonſtration, that the thinking ſubſtance in us is immaterial. Whereupon your lordſhip aſks, "and is not this an admirable way to bring us to a cer-"tainty of reaſon?" The way of argument which your lordſhip oppoſes to the way of ideas, will, I humbly conceive, from philoſophy, as little afford us a demonſtration, that the thinking ſubſtance in us is immaterial. Whereupon, may not any one likewiſe aſk, "and is not "this an admirable way to bring us to a certainty of "reaſon?" Is any way, I beſeech your lordſhip, to be condemned as an ill way to bring us to certainty, demonſtrative certainty, becauſe it brings us not to it in a point where reaſon cannot attain to ſuch certainty? Algebra is a way to bring us to certainty in mathematicks; but muſt it be preſently condemned as an ill way, becauſe there are ſome queſtions in mathematics, which a man cannot come to certainty in by the way of Algebra?

In page 247, after having ſet down ſeveral confeſſions of mine, "of the ſhortneſs of human underſtand-"ing," your lordſhip adds theſe words: "I appeal "now to the reaſon of mankind, whether it can be any "reaſonable foundation for rejecting a doctrine pro-"poſed to us as a divine revelation, becauſe we cannot "comprehend the manner of it; eſpecially when it "relates to the divine eſſence." And I beſeech you, my lord, where did I ever ſay ſo, or any thing like it? And yet it is impoſſible for any reader but to imagine, that that propoſition which your lordſhip appeals to the reaſon of mankind againſt, is a propoſition of mine, which your lordſhip is confuting out of confeſſions of my own, great numbers whereof ſtand quoted out of my Eſſay, in ſeveral pages of your lordſhip's book, both before before and after this your lordship's appeal to the reason of mankind. And now I must appeal to your lordship, whether you find any such proposition in my book? If your lordship does not, I too must then appeal to the reason of mankind, whether it be reasonable for your lordship to bring so many confessions out of my book, to confute a proposition that is no-where in it? There is, no doubt, reason for it; which since your lordship does not, that I see, declare, and I have not wit enough to discover, I shall therefore leave to the reason of mankind to find out.

Your lordship has, in this part of your discourse, spoke very much of reason; as,—" is not this an admirable way to bring us to a certainty of reason?—And " therefore it is a vain thing in any to pretend, that all " our reason and certainty is founded on clear and " distinct ideas.—I appeal now to the reason of man- " kind.—I am yet upon the certainty of our reason.— " The certainty is not placed in the idea, but in good " and sound reason.—Allowing the argument to be " good, yet it is not taken from the idea, but from " principles of true reason."

What your lordship says at the beginning of this chapter, in these words, " we must consider what we " understand by reason," made me hope I should here find what your lordship understands by reason explained, that so I might rectify my notion of it, and might be able to avoid the obscurity and confusion which very much perplex most of the discourses, wherein it is appealed to or from as judge. But notwithstanding the explication I flattered myself with the hopes of, from what I thought your lordship had promised, I find no other account of reason, but in quotations out of others, which your lordship justly blames. Had I been so happy as to have been enlightened in this point by your lordship's learned pen, so as to have seen distinctly what your lordship understands by reason, I should possibly have excused myself from giving your lordship the trouble of these papers, and been able to have perceived, without applying myself any farther to your lordship, how so much of my Essay came into a chapter, which was designed deſigned to anſwer "objections againſt the trinity, in "point of reaſon." It follows:

"But I go yet farther: and as I have already ſhowed, "we can have no certainty of an immaterial ſubſtance "within us, from theſe ſimple ideas; ſo I ſhall now "ſhow, that there can be no ſufficient evidence brought "from them, by their own confeſſion, concerning the "exiſtence of the moſt ſpiritual and infinite ſubſtance, "even God himſelf." And then your lordſhip goes on to give an account of my proof of a God: which your lordſhip cloſes with theſe words:

"That which I deſign is to ſhow, that the certainty "of it is not placed upon any clear and diſtinct ideas, "but upon the force of reaſon diſtinct from it; which "was the thing I intended to prove."

If this be the thing your lordſhip deſigned, I am then at a loſs who your lordſhip deſigned it againſt: for I do not remember that I have any where ſaid, that we could not be convinced by reaſon of any truth, but where all the ideas concerned in that conviction were clear and diſtinct; for knowledge and certainty, in my opinion, lies in the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of ideas, ſuch as they are, and not always in having perfectly clear and diſtinct ideas. Though thoſe, I muſt own, the clearer and more diſtinct they are, contribute very much to our more clear and diſtinct reaſoning and diſcourſing about them. But in ſome caſes we may have certainty about obſcure ideas; v. g. by the clear idea of thinking in me, I find the agreement of the clear idea of exiſtence, and the obſcure idea of a ſubſtance in me, becauſe I perceive the neceſſary idea of thinking, and the relative idea of a ſupport; which ſupport, without having any clear and diſtinct idea of what it is, beyond this relative one of a ſupport, I call ſubſtance.

If your lordſhip intended this againſt another, who has ſaid, "clear and diſtinct ideas are the ſole matter "and foundation of all our reaſoning;" it ſeems very ſtrange to me, that your lordſhip ſhould intend it againſt one, and quote the words of another. For above ten pages before, your lordſhip had quoted nothing but my book; and in the immediate preceding paragraph bring a large quotation out of the tenth ſection of the tenth chapter of my fourth book; of which your lordſhip ſays, " this is the ſubſtance of the argument uſed, to prove " an infinite ſpiritual being, which I am far from " weakening the force of; but that which I deſign is " to ſhow, that the certainty of it is not placed upon " clear and diſtinct ideas." Whom now, I beſeech your lordſhip, can this be underſtood to be intended againſt, but me? For how can my uſing an argument, whoſe certainty is not placed upon clear and diſtinct ideas, prove any thing againſt another man, who ſays, " that clear and diſtinct ideas are the ſole matter and " foundation of all our reaſoning?" This proves only againſt him that uſes the argument; and therefore either I muſt be ſuppoſed here to hold, that clear and diſtinct ideas are the ſole matter and foundation of all our reaſoning, (which I do not remember that I ever ſaid) or elſe that your lordſhip here proves againſt no-body.

a large

But though I do not remember that I have any where ſaid, that clear and diſtinct ideas are the ſole matter and foundation of all our reaſoning; yet I do own, that ſimple ideas are the foundations of all our knowledge, if that be it which your lordſhip queſtions: and therefore I muſt think myſelf concerned in what your lordſhip ſays in this very place, in theſe words, " I ſhall " now ſhow, that there can be no ſufficient evidence " brought from theſe ſimple ideas, by their own con- " feſſion, concerning the exiſtence of God himſelf."

This being ſpoken in the plural number, cannot be underſtood to be meant of the author of Chriſtianity not myſterious, and no-body elſe: and whom can any reader reaſonably apply it to, but the author of the Eſſay of Human Underſtanding; ſince, beſides that it ſtands in the midſt of a great many quotations out of that book, without any other perſon being named, or any one's words but mine quoted, my proof alone of a deity is brought out of that book, to make good what your lordſhip here ſays; and no-body elſe is any where mentioned or quoted concerning it?

The ſame way of ſpeaking of the perſons you are arguing againſt in the plural number, your lordſhip uſes

in

in other places; as, " which they may call a complica" tion of ſimple ideas, if they pleaſe."

" We do not envy theſe pretenders to reaſon; but " methinks they ſhould not at the ſame time aſſert the " abſolute neceſſity of theſe ideas to our knowledge,
" and declare that we may have certain knowledge
" without them." And all along in that page, " they."
And in the very next page my words being quoted, your lordſhip aſks, " how can that be, when the ſame perſons
" ſay, that notwithſtanding their ideas, it is impoſſible
" for matter to think?" So that I do not ſee how I can exempt myſelf from being meant to be one of thoſe pretenders to reaſon, wherewith we can be certain without any foundation of reaſon; which your lordſhip, in the immediate foregoing page, does not envy for this new ſort of certainty. How can it be underſtood but that I am one of thoſe perſons, that " at the ſame time
" aſſert the abſolute neceſſity of theſe ideas to our " knowledge, and declare that we may have certain " knowledge without them?" Though your lordſhip very civilly ſays, " that you muſt do that right " to the ingenious author of the Eſſay of Human Un" derſtanding (from whence theſe notions are borrowed, " to ſerve other purpoſes than he intended them) that,"
&c. yet, methinks, it is the author himſelf, and his uſe of theſe notions, that is blamed and argued againſt; but ſtill in the plural number, which he confeſſes himſelf not to underſtand.

My lord, if your lordſhip can ſhow me where I pretend to reaſon or certainty, without any foundation of reaſon; or where it is I aſſert the abſolute neceſſity of any ideas to our knowledge, and declare that we may have certain knowledge without them, your lordſhip will do me a great favour: for this, I grant, is a new ſort of certainty which I long to be rid of, and to diſown to the world. But truly, my lord, as I pretended to no new ſort of certainty, but juſt ſuch as human underſtanding was poſſeſſed of before I was born; and ſhould be glad I could get more out of the books and writings that come abroad in my days: ſo, my lord, if I have any where pretended to any new ſort of certainty, I beſeech your lordship show me the place, that I may correct the vanity of it, and unsay it to the world.

your

Again, your lordship says thus, " I know not whether " it argues more stupidity or arrogance to expose a " doctrine relating to the divine essence, because they " cannot comprehend the manner of it."

Here, my lord, I find the same " they" again, which, some pages back, evidently involved me: and since that you have named nobody besides me, nor alleged any body's writings but mine; give me leave, therefore, to ask your lordship, whether I am one of these " they" here also, that I may know whether I am concerned to answer for myself? I am ashamed to importune your lordship so often about the same matter; but I meet with so many places in your lordship's (I had almost said new) way of writing, that put me to a stand, not knowing whether I am meant or no, that I am at a loss whether I should clear myself from what possibly your lordship does not lay to my charge; and yet the reader, thinking it meant of me, should conclude that to be in my book which is not there, and which I utterly disown.

Though I cannot be joined with those who expose a doctrine relating to the divine essence, because they cannot comprehend the manner of it; unless your lordship can show where I have so exposed it, which I deny that I have any where done; yet your lordship, before you come to the bottom of the same page, has these words, " I shall now show, that there can be no sufficient evi- " dence brought from them, by their own confession, " concerning the existence of the most spiritual and in- " finite substance, even God himself."

If your lordship did mean me in that " they" which is some lines backwards, I must complain to your lordship that you have done me an injury, in imputing that to me which I have not done. And if " their" here were not meant by your lordship to relate to the same persons, I ask by what shall the reader distinguish them? And how shall any body know who your lordship means? For that I am comprehended here is apparent, by your quoting my essay in the very next words, and arguing against it in the following pages.

I enter

I enter not here into your lordſhip's argument; that which I am now conſidering is your lordſhip's peculiar way of writing in this part of your treatiſe, which makes me often in doubt, whether the reader will not condemn my book upon your lordſhip's authority, where he thinks me concerned, if I ſay nothing: and yet your lordſhip may look upon my defence as ſuperfluous, when I did not hold what your lordſhip argued againſt.

But to go on with your lordſhip's argument, your lordſhip ſays, "I ſhall now ſhow that there can be no ſuffi-"cient evidence brought from ſimple ideas by their "own confeſſion, concerning the exiſtence of the moſt "ſpiritual and infinite ſubſtance, even God himſelf."

Your lordſhip's way of proving it is this: your lordſhip ſays, we are told, b. iv. c. 10. § 1, "That the evidence of it is equal to mathematical certainty; "and very good arguments are brought to prove it, in a chap-"ter on purpoſe: but that which I take notice of, is, "that the argument from the clear and diſtinct idea of "a God is paſſed over." Suppoſing all this to be ſo, your lordſhip, methinks, with ſubmiſſion, does not prove the propoſition you undertook, which was this; "there can be no ſufficient evidence brought from "ſimple ideas, by their own confeſſion concerning [i. e. "to prove] the exiſtence of a God." For if I did in that chapter, as your lordſhip ſays, paſs over the proof from the clear and diſtinct idea of God, that, I preſume, is no confeſſion that there can be no ſufficient evidence brought from clear and diſtinct ideas, much leſs from ſimple ideas, concerning the exiſtence of a God; becauſe the uſing of one argument brought from one foundation, is no confeſſion that there is not another principle or foundation. But, my lord, I ſhall not inſiſt upon this, whether it be a confeſſion or no.

Leaving confeſſion out of the propoſition, I humbly conceive your lordſhip's argument does not prove. Your lordſhip's propoſition to be proved, is, "there "can be ſufficient evidence brought from ſimple ideas "to prove the exiſtence of a God;" and your lordſhip's reaſon is, becauſe the argument from the clear and diſtinct idea of God is omitted in my proof of a God.

I will ſuppoſe, for the ſtrengthening your lordſhip's reaſoning in the caſe, that I had ſaid (which I am far enough from ſaying) that there was no other argument to prove the exiſtence of God, but what I had uſed in that chapter; yet, my lord, with all this, your lordſhip's argument, I humbly conceive, would not hold: for I might bring evidence from ſimple ideas, though I brought none from the idea of God; for the idea we have of God is a complex, and no ſimple idea. So that the terms being changed from ſimple ideas to a clear and diſtinct complex idea of God, the propoſition which was undertaken to be proved, ſeems to me unproved.

Your lordſhip's next words are, " how can this be " conſiſtent with deducing our certainty of knowledge " from clear and ſimple ideas?"

Here your lordſhip joins ſomething that is mine with ſomething that is not mine. I do ſay, that all our knowledge is founded in ſimple ideas; but I do not ſay, it is all deduced from clear ideas; much leſs that we cannot have any certain knowledge of the exiſtence of any thing, whereof we have not a clear, diſtinct, complex idea; or, that the complex idea muſt be clear enough to be in itſelf the evidence of the exiſtence of that thing; which ſeems to be your lordſhip's meaning here. Our knowledge is all founded on ſimple ideas, as I have before explained, though not always about ſimple ideas; for we may know the truth of propoſitions which include complex ideas, and thoſe complex ideas may not always be perfectly clear ideas.

In the remaining part of this page, it follows: " I do " not go about to juſtify thoſe who lay the whole ſtreſs " upon that foundation, which I grant to be too weak " to ſupport ſo important a truth; and that thoſe are " very much to blame, who go about to invalidate other " arguments for the ſake of that: but I doubt all that " talk about clear and diſtinct ideas being made the " foundation of certainty, came originally from theſe " diſcourſes or meditations, which are aimed at. The " author of them was an ingenious thinking man, and " he endeavoured to lay the foundation of certainty, as " well as he could. The firſt thing he found any cer-

" tainty

" tainty in, was his own exiſtence; which he founded " upon the perceptions of the acts of his mind, which " ſome call an internal infallible perception that we are. " From hence he proceeded to inquire, how we came " by this certainty? And he reſolved it into this, that " he had a clear and diſtinct perception of it; and from " hence he formed this general rule, that what he had a " clear and diſtinct perception of was true. Which in " reaſon ought to go no farther, than where there is the " like degree of evidence."

This account which your lordſhip gives here, what it was wherein Deſcartes laid the foundation of certainty, containing nothing in it to ſhow what your lordſhip propoſed here, viz. " that there can be no ſufficient " evidence brought from ideas, by my own confeſſion, " concerning the exiſtence of God himſelf;" I willingly excuſe myſelf from troubling your lordſhip concerning it. Only I crave leave to make my acknowledgment to your lordſhip, for what you are pleaſed, by the way, to drop in theſe words: " But I doubt all this talk about " clear and diſtinct ideas being made the foundation of " certainty, came originally from theſe diſcourſes or " meditations, which are aimed at."

By the quotations in your lordſhip's immediately preceding words taken out of my Eſſay, which relate to that ingenious thinking author, as well as by what in your following words is ſaid of his founding certainty in his own exiſtence; it is hard to avoid thinking that your lordſhip means, that I borrowed from him my notions concerning certainty. And your lordſhip is ſo great a man, and every way ſo far above my meanneſs, that it cannot be ſuppoſed that your lordſhip intended this for any thing but a commendation of me to the world, as the ſcholar of ſo great a maſter. But though I muſt always acknowledge to that juſtly-admired gentleman the great obligation of my firſt deliverance from the unintelligible way of talking of the philoſophy in uſe in the ſchools in his time, yet I am ſo far from entitling his writings to any of the errors or imperfections which are to be found in my Eſſay, as deriving their original from him, that I muſt own to your your lordſhip they were ſpun barely out of my own thoughts, reflecting as well as I could on my own mind, and the ideas I had there; and were not, that I know, derived from any other original. But, poſſibly, I all this while aſſume to myſelf an honour which your lordſhip did not intend to me by this intimation; for though what goes before and after ſeems to appropriate thoſe words to me, yet ſome part of them brings me under my uſual doubt, which I ſhall remain under till I know whom theſe words, viz. " this talk about clear and diſ-" tinct ideas being made the foundation of certainty," belong to.

B. iv. c. 10. § 7.

The remaining part of this paragraph contains a diſcourſe of your lordſhip's upon Deſcartes's general rule of certainty, in theſe words: " For the certainty here " was not grounded on the clearneſs of the perception, " but on the plainneſs of the evidence, which is that " of nature, that the very doubting of it proves it; " ſince it is impoſſible, that any thing ſhould doubt or " queſtion its own being, that had it not. So that here " it is not the clearneſs of the idea, but an immediate " act of perception which is the true ground of cer-" tainty. And this cannot extend to things without " ourſelves, of which we can have no other perception, " than what is cauſed by the impreſſions of outward " objects. But whether we are to judge according to " theſe impreſſions, doth not depend on our ideas them-" ſelves, but upon the exerciſe of our judgment and " reaſon about them, which put the difference between " true and falſe, and adequate and inadequate ideas. " So that our certainty is not from the ideas themſelves, " but from the evidence of reaſon, that thoſe ideas are " true and juſt, and conſequently that we may build " our certainty upon them."

Granting all this to be ſo, yet I muſt confeſs, my lord, I do not ſee how it any way tends to ſhow either your lordſhip's proof, or my confeſſion " that my proof of an " infinite ſpiritual being is not placed upon ideas; " which is what your lordſhip profeſſes to be your de-" ſign here."

But though we are not yet come to your lordſhip's proof, that the certainty in my proof of a deity is not placed on ideas, yet I crave leave to conſider what your lordſhip ſays here concerning certainty; about which one cannot employ too many thoughts to find wherein it is placed. Your lordſhip ſays, "That Deſcartes's certainty was not grounded on the clearneſs of the perception, but on the plainneſs of the evidence." And a little lower; here (i. e. in Deſcartes's foundation of certainty) it is not the clearneſs of the idea, but an immediate "act of perception, on which is the true ground "of certainty." And a little lower, that "in things "without us, our certainty is not from the ideas, but "from the evidence of reaſon that thoſe ideas are true "and juſt."

Your lordſhip, I hope, will pardon my dulneſs, if after your lordſhip has placed the grounds of certainty of our own exiſtence, ſometimes in the plainneſs of the evidence, in oppoſition to the clearneſs of the perception; ſometimes in the immediate act of perception, in oppoſition to the clearneſs of the idea; and the certainty of other things without us, in the evidence of reaſon that theſe ideas are true and juſt, in oppoſition to the ideas themſelves: I know not, by theſe rules, wherein to place certainty; and therefore ſtick to my own plain way, by ideas, delivered in theſe words: "Wherever we "perceive the agreement or diſagreement B. 4. c. 4. § 18. "of any of our ideas, there is certain know- "ledge; and wherever we are ſure thoſe "ideas agree with the reality of things, there is certain "real knowledge. Of which agreement of our ideas "with the reality of things, I think I have ſhown "wherein it is that certainty, real certainty, conſiſts." Whereof more may be ſeen in chap. vi. in which, if your lordſhip find any miſtakes, I ſhall take it as a great honour to be ſet right by you.

Your lordſhip, as far as I can gueſs your meaning (for I muſt own I do not clearly comprehend it) ſeems to me, in the foregoing paſſage, to oppoſe this aſſertion, that the certainty of the being of any thing might be made out from the idea of that thing. Truly, my lord, I am ſo far from ſaying (or thinking) ſo, that I never knew any one of that mind but Deſcartes, and ſome that have followed him in his proof of a God, from the idea which we have of God in us; which I was ſo far from thinking a ſufficient ground of certainty, that your lordſhip makes uſe of my denying or doubting of it, againſt me, as we ſhall ſee in the following words:

am

" But the idea of an infinite being has this peculiar " to it, that neceſſary exiſtence is implied in it. This " is a clear and diſtinct idea, and yet it is denied that " this doth prove the exiſtence of God. How then " can the grounds of our certainty ariſe from the clear " and diſtinct ideas, when in one of the cleareſt ideas " of our minds, we can come to no certainty by it?"

Your lordſhip's proof here, as far as I comprehend it, ſeems to be, that it is confeſſed, " That certainty does " not ariſe from clear and diſtinct ideas, becauſe it is " denied that the clear and diſtinct idea of an infinite " being, that implies neceſſary exiſtence in it, does " prove the exiſtence of a God."

Here your lordſhip ſays, it is denied; and in five lines after you recal that ſaying, and uſe theſe words, " I do not ſay that it is denied, to prove it:" which of theſe two ſayings of your lordſhip's muſt I now anſwer to? If your lordſhip ſays it is denied, I fear that will not hold to be ſo in matter of fact, which made your lordſhip unſay it; though that being moſt to your lordſhip's purpoſe, occaſioned, I ſuppoſe, its dropping from your pen. For if it be not denied, I think the whole force of your lordſhip's argument fails. But your lordſhip helps that out as well as the thing will bear, by the words that follow in the ſentence, which altogether ſtands thus: " I do not ſay, that it is denied, to prove " it; but this is ſaid, that it is a doubtful thing, from " the different make of men's tempers, and application " of their thoughts. What can this mean, unleſs it be " to let us know that even clear and diſtinct ideas may " loſe their effect, by the difference of men's tempers " and ſtudies? So that beſides ideas, in order to a right " judgment, a due temper and application of the mind " is required."

If I meant in thoſe words of mine, quoted here by your lordſhip, juſt as your lordſhip concludes they mean, I know not why I ſhould be aſhamed of it; for I never thought that ideas, even the moſt clear and diſtinct, would make men certain of what might be demonſtrated from them, unleſs they were of a temper to conſider, and would apply their minds to them. There are no ideas more clear and diſtinct than thoſe of numbers, and yet there are a thouſand demonſtrations concerning numbers, which millions of men do not know, (and ſo have not the certainty about them that they might have) for want of application.

I could not avoid here to take this to myſelf: for this paſſage of your lordſhip's is pinned down upon me ſo cloſe, by your lordſhip's citing the 7th ſect. of the 10th chapter of my ivth book, that I am forced here to anſwer for myſelf; which I ſhall do, after having firſt ſet down my words, as they ſtand in the place quoted by your lordſhip: "How far the idea of a moſt B. iv. c. 10. § 7. "perfect being, which a man may frame in "his mind, does or does not prove the "exiſtence of a God, I will not here examine. For "in the different make of men's tempers and applica-"tion of their thoughts, ſome arguments prevail more "on one, and ſome on another, for the confirmation "of the ſame truth. But yet, I think, this I may ſay, "that it is an ill way of eſtabliſhing this truth, and "ſilencing atheiſts, to lay the whole ſtreſs of ſo impor-"tant a point as this, upon that ſole foundation, and "take ſome men's having that idea of God in their "minds (for it is evident, ſome men have none, and "ſome a worſe than none, and the moſt very different) "for the only proof of a Deity; and, out of an over-"fondneſs of that darling invention, caſhier, or at leaſt "endeavour to invalidate all other arguments, and for-"bid us to hearken to thoſe proofs, as being weak, or "fallacious, which our own exiſtence, and the ſenſible "parts of the univerſe, offer ſo clearly and cogently to "our thoughts, that I deem it impoſſible for a conſi-"dering man to withſtand them. For I judge it as "certain and clear a truth, as can any where be deli"vered,

" vered, that the invisible things of God are clearly " seen from the creation of the world, being understood " by the things that are made, even his eternal power " and godhead."

The meaning of which words of mine was not to deny that the idea of a most perfect being doth prove a God, but to blame those who take it for the only proof, and endeavour to invalidate all others. For the belief of a God being, as I say in the same section, the foundation of all religion and genuine morality, I thought no arguments that are made use of to work the persuasion of a God into men's minds, should be invalidated. And the reason I give why they should all be left to their full strength, and none of them rejected as unfit to be hearkened to, is this: because " in the different make of " men's tempers and application of their thoughts, " some arguments prevail more on one, and some on " another, for the confirmation of the same truth." So that my meaning here was not, as your lordship supposes, to ground certainty on the different make of men's tempers, and application of their thoughts, in opposition to clear and distinct ideas, as is very evident from my words; but to show of what ill consequence it is, to go about to invalidate any argument, which hath a tendency to settle the belief of a God in any one's mind; because in the difference of men's tempers and application, some arguments prevail more on one, and some on another: so that I speaking of belief, and your lordship, as I take it, speaking in that place of certainty, nothing can (I crave leave to say) be inferred from these words of mine to your lordship's purpose. And that I meant belief, and not certainty, is evident from hence, that I look upon the argument there spoken of, as not conclusive, and so not able to produce certainty in any one, though I did not know how far it might prevail on some men's persuasions to confirm them in the truth. And since not all, nor the most of those that believe a God, are at the pains, or have the skill, to examine and clearly comprehend the demonstrations of his being, I was unwilling to show the weakness of the argument there spoken of; since possibly by it some men might be confirmed in the belief of a God, which is enough to preſerve in them true ſentiments of religion and morality.

Your lordſhip hereupon aſks, "Wherein is this different from what all men of underſtanding have ſaid?"

I anſwer: in nothing that I know; nor did I ever, that I remember, ſay that it was. Your lordſhip goes on to demand,

"Why then ſhould theſe clear and ſimple ideas be "made the ſole foundation of reaſon?"

I anſwer: that I know not: they muſt give your lordſhip a reaſon for it, who have made clear ideas the ſole foundation of reaſon. Why I have made ſimple ones the foundation of all knowledge, I have ſhown. Your lordſhip goes on:

"One would think by this"——

By what, I beſeech your lordſhip?

"That theſe ideas would preſently ſatisfy men's "minds, if they attended to them."

What thoſe ideas are from which your lordſhip would expect ſuch preſent ſatisfaction, and upon what grounds your lordſhip expects it, I do not know. But this I will venture to ſay, that all the ſatisfaction men's minds can have in their inquiries after truth and certainty, is to be had only from conſidering, obſerving, and rightly laying together of ideas, ſo as to find out their agreement or diſagreement, and no other way.

But I do not think ideas have truth and certainty always ſo ready to ſatisfy the mind in its inquiries, that there needs no more to be ſatisfied, than to attend to them as one does to a man, whom one aſks a queſtion to be ſatisfied; which your lordſhip's way of expreſſion ſeems to me to intimate. But they muſt be conſidered well, and their habitudes examined; and where their agreement or diſagreement cannot be perceived by an immediate compariſon, other ideas muſt be found out to diſcover the agreement or diſagreement of thoſe under conſideration, and then all laid in a due order, before the mind can be ſatisfied in the certainty of that truth, which it is ſeeking after. This, my lord, requires often a little more time and pains, than attending to a tale that is told for present satisfaction. And I believe some of the incomparable Mr. Newton's wonderful demonstrations cost him so much pains, that though they were all founded in nothing but several ideas of quantity, yet those ideas did not presently satisfy his mind, though they were such that, with great application and labour of thought, they were able to satisfy him with certainty, i. e. produce demonstration. Your lordship adds,

that

" But even this will not do as to the idea of an infi" nite being."

Though the complex idea for which the sound God stands (whether containing in it the idea of necessary existence or no, for the case is the same) will not prove the real existence of a being answering that idea, any more than any other idea in any one's mind will prove the existence of any real being answering that idea; yet, I humbly conceive, it does not hence follow, but that there may be other ideas by which the being of a God may be proved. For nobody that I know ever said, that every idea would prove every thing, or that an idea in men's minds would prove the existence of such a real being: and therefore if this idea fail to prove, what is proposed to be proved by it, it is no more an exception against the way of ideas, than it would be an exception against the way of medius terminus, in arguing that some body used one that did not prove. It follows:

" It is not enough to say they will not examine how " far it will hold; for they ought either to say, that it " doth hold, or give up this ground of certainty from
" clear and distinct ideas."

Here, my lord, I am got again into the plural number: but not knowing any body but myself who has used these words which are set down out of my essay, and which you are in this and the forgoing paragraph arguing against, I am forced to beg your lordship to let me know, who those persons are whom your lordship, joining with me, entitles with me to these words of my book; or to whom your lordship joining me, entitles me by these words of mine to what they have published, that I may see how far I am answerable for them.

Now as to the words themſelves, viz. "I will not "examine how far the idea propoſed does or does not "prove the exiſtence of a God," becauſe they are mine; and your lordſhip excepts againſt them, and tells me, "it was not enough to ſay, I will not examine, &c. "For I ought either to have ſaid, that it doth hold, or "give up this ground of certainty from clear and diſ-"tinct ideas." I will anſwer as well as I can.

I could not then, my lord, well ſay, that that doth hold, which I thought did not hold; but I imagined I might, without entering into the examen, and ſhowing the weakneſs of that argument, paſs it by with ſaying, I would not examine, and ſo left it with this thought, "valeat quantum valere poteſt."

But though I did this, and ſaid not then, it will hold, nay think now it will not hold, yet I do not ſee how from thence I was then, or am now under any neceſſity to give up the ground of certainty from ideas; becauſe the ground of certainty from ideas may be right, though in the preſent inſtance a right uſe were not made of them, or a right idea was not made uſe of to produce the certainty ſought. Ideas in mathematics are a ſure ground of certainty; and yet every one may not make ſo right an uſe of them, as to attain to certainty by them: but yet any one's failing of certainty by them, is not the overturning of this truth, that certainty is to be had by them. Clear and diſtinct I have omitted here to join with ideas, not becauſe clear and diſtinct make any ideas unfit to produce certainty, which have all other fitneſs to do it; but becauſe I do not limit certainty to clear and diſtinct ideas only, ſince there may be certainty from ideas that are not in all their parts perfectly clear and diſtinct.

Your lordſhip, in the following paragraph, endeavours to ſhow, that I have not proved the being of a God by ideas; and from thence, with an argument not unlike the preceding, you conclude, that ideas cannot be the grounds of certainty, becauſe I have not grounded my proof of a God on ideas. To which way of argumentation I muſt crave leave here again to reply, that your lordſhip's ſuppoſing, as you do, that there is another other way to certainty, which is not that of ideas, does not prove that certainty may not be had from ideas, becauſe I make uſe of that other way. This being premiſed, I ſhall endeavour to ſhow, that my proof of a Deity is all grounded on ideas, however your lordſhip is pleaſed to call it by other names. Your lordſhip's words are:

" But inſtead of the proper argument from ideas, we " are told, that—from the conſideration of ourſelves, " and what we find in our own conſtitutions, our reaſon " leads us to the knowledge of this certain and evident " truth, that there is an eternal, moſt powerful, and " moſt knowing being. All which I readily yield; but " we ſee plainly, the certainty is not placed in the idea, " but in good and ſound reaſon," from the conſideration of ourſelves and our conſtitutions. " What! in " the idea of ourſelves? No certainly."

Give me leave, my lord, to aſk where I ever ſaid, that certainty was placed in the idea, which your lordſhip urges my words as a contradiction of? I think I never ſaid ſo. 1. Becauſe I do not remember it. 2. Becauſe your lordſhip has not quoted any place where I have ſaid ſo. 3. Becauſe I all along in my book, which has the honour to be ſo often quoted here by your lordſhip, ſay the quite contrary. For I place certainty where I think every body will find it, and no where elſe, viz. in the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of ideas; ſo that, in my opinion, it is impoſſible to be placed in any one ſingle idea, ſimple or complex. I muſt own, that I think certainty grounded on ideas: and therefore to take your lordſhip's words here, as I think they are meant, in oppoſition to what I ſay, I ſhall take the liberty to change your lordſhip's words here, " What! in the idea of ourſelves? No certainly;" into words uſed by your lordſhip in the foregoing page, to the ſame purpoſe, " What! can the grounds of our " certainty ariſe from the idea of ourſelves? No cer- " tainly."

To which permit me, my lord, with due reſpect to reply, Yes, certainly. The certainty of the being of a God, in my proof, is grounded on the idea of ourſelves, as we are thinking beings. But your lordſhip urges my own words, which are, that "from the conſideration of "ourſelves, and what we find in our conſtitutions, our "reaſon leads us to the knowledge of this certain and "evident truth."

as

My lord, I muſt confeſs I never thought, that the conſideration of ourſelves, and what we find in our own conſtitutions, excluded the conſideration of the idea either of being or of thinking, two of the ideas that make a part of the complex idea a man has of himſelf. If conſideration of ourſelves excludes thoſe ideas, I may be charged with ſpeaking improperly: but it is plain, nevertheleſs, that I ground the proof of a God on thoſe ideas, and I thought I ſpoke properly enough; when meaning that the conſideration of thoſe ideas, which our own being offered us, and ſo finding their agreement or diſagreement with others, we were thereby, i. e. by thus reaſoning, led into the knowledge of the exiſtence of the firſt infinite being, i. e. of God; I expreſſed it as I did, in the more familiar way of ſpeaking. For my purpoſe, in that chapter, being to make out the knowledge of the exiſtence of a God, and not to prove that it was by ideas, I thought it moſt proper to expreſs myſelf in the moſt uſual and familiar way, to let it the eaſier into men's minds, by common words and known ways of expreſſion: and therefore, as I think, I have ſcarce uſed the word idea in that whole chapter, but only in that one place, where my ſpeaking againſt laying the whole proof only upon our idea of a moſt perfect being obliged me to it.

But your lordſhip ſays, that in this way of coming to a certain knowledge of the being of a God, "from the "conſideration of ourſelves, and what we find in our "own conſtitutions, the certainty is placed in good and "ſound reaſon." I hope ſo. "But not in the idea."

What your lordſhip here means by not placed in the idea, I confeſs, I do not well underſtand; but if your lordſhip means that it is not grounded on the ideas of thinking and exiſtence before-mentioned, and the comparing of them, and finding their agreement or diſagreement with other ideas, that I muſt take the liberty to diſſent from: for in this ſenſe it may be placed in ideas, and in good and ſound reaſon too, i. e. in reaſon rightly managing thoſe ideas ſo as to produce evidence by them. So that, my lord, I muſt own I ſee not the force of the argument, which ſays, not in ideas but in ſound reaſon; ſince I ſee no ſuch oppoſition between them, but that ideas and ſound reaſon may conſiſt together. For inſtance: when a man would ſhow the certainty of this truth, that the three angles of a triangle are equal to two right ones; the firſt thing probably that he does, is to draw a diagram. What is the uſe of that diagram? but ſteadily to ſuggeſt to his mind thoſe ſeveral ideas he would make uſe of in that demonſtration. The conſidering and laying theſe together in ſuch order, and with ſuch connexion, as to make the agreement of the ideas of the three angles of the triangle, with the ideas of two right ones, to be perceived, is called right reaſoning, and the buſineſs of that faculty which we call reaſon; which when it operates rightly by conſidering and comparing ideas ſo as to produce certainty, this ſhowing or demonſtration that the thing is ſo, is called good and ſound reaſon. The ground of this certainty lies in ideas themſelves, and their agreement or diſagreement, which reaſon neither does nor can alter, but only lays them ſo together as to make it perceivable; and without ſuch a due conſideration and ordering of the ideas, certainty could not be had: and thus certainty is placed both in ideas, and in good and ſound reaſon.

to

This affords an eaſy anſwer to your lordſhip's next words, brought to prove, that the certainty of a God is not placed on the idea of ourſelves. They ſtand thus:

" For let our ideas be taken which way we pleaſe, " by ſenſation or reflection, yet it is not the idea that " makes us certain, but the argument from that which " we perceive in and about ourſelves."

Nothing truer than that it is not the idea that makes us certain without reaſon, or without the underſtanding: but it is as true, that it is not reaſon, it is not the underſtanding, that makes us certain without ideas. It is not the ſun makes me certain it is day, without my eyes; nor it is not my ſight makes me certain it is day, without the ſun; but the one employed about the other. Nor is it one idea by itſelf, that in this, or any caſe, makes us certain; but certainty conſiſts in the perceived agreement or diſagreement of all the ideas that ſerve to ſhow the agreement or diſagreement of diſtinct ideas, as they ſtand in the propoſition, whoſe truth or falſehood we would be certain of. The uſing of intermediate ideas to ſhow this is called argumentation, and the ideas ſo uſed in train, an argument; ſo that in my poor opinion to ſay, that the argument makes us certain, is no more than ſaying, the ideas made uſe of make us certain.

is

The idea of thinking in ourſelves, which we receive by reflection, we may, by intermediate ideas, perceive to have a neceſſary agreement and connexion with the idea of the exiſtence of an eternal, thinking being. This, whether your lordſhip will call placing of certainty in the idea, or placing the certainty in reaſon; whether your lordſhip will ſay, it is not the idea that gives us the certainty, but the argument; is indifferent to me; I ſhall not be ſo unmannerly as to preſcribe to your lordſhip what way you ſhould ſpeak, in this or any other matter. But this your lordſhip will give me leave to ſay, that let it be called how your lordſhip pleaſes, there is no contradiction in it to what I have ſaid concerning certainty, or the way how we came by it, or the ground on which I place it. Your lordſhip farther urges my words out of the fifth ſection of the ſame chapter.

But "we find in ourſelves perception and know"ledge. It is very true. But how doth this prove
"there is a God? Is it from the clear and diſtinct idea "of it? No, but from this argument, that either there
"muſt have been a knowing being from eternity, or "an unknowing, for ſomething muſt have been from "eternity: but if an unknowing being, then it was "impoſſible there ever ſhould have been any know"ledge, it being as impoſſible that a thing without "knowledge ſhould produce it, as that a triangle

"ſhould

" should make itself three angles bigger than two right " ones." Allowing the argument to be good, " yet " it is not taken from the idea, but from the principles " of true reason; as, that no man can doubt his own " perception; that every thing must have a cause; that " this cause must have either a knowledge or not; if it " have, the point is gained: if it hath not, nothing " can produce nothing; and consequently a not know- " ing being cannot produce a knowing."

Your lordship here contends, that my argument is not taken from the idea, but from true principles of reason. I do not say it is taken from any one idea, but from all the ideas concerned in it. But your lordship, if you herein oppose any thing I have said, must, I humbly conceive, say, not from ideas, but from true principles of reason; several whereof your lordship has here set down. And whence, I beseech your lordship, comes the certainty of any of those propositions, which your lordship calls true principles of reason, but from the perceivable agreement or disagreement of the ideas contained in them? Just as it is expressed in those propositions, v. g. " a man cannot doubt of his own per- " ception," is a true principle of reason, or a true proposition, or a certain proposition: but to the certainty of it we arrive, only by perceiving the necessary agreement of the two ideas of perception and self-consciousness.

Again, " every thing must have a cause:" though I find it so set down for one by your lordship, yet, I humbly conceive, is not a true principle of reason, nor a true proposition; but the contrary. The certainty whereof we attain by the contemplation of our ideas, and by perceiving that the idea of eternity, and the idea of the existence of something, do agree; and the idea of existence from eternity, and of having a cause, do not agree, or are inconsistent within the same thing. But " every thing that has a beginning must have " a cause," is a true principle of reason, or a proposition certainly true; which we come to know by the same way, i. e. by contemplating our ideas, and perceiving that the idea of beginning to be, is necessarily connected connected with the idea of ſome operation; and the idea of operation, with the idea of ſomething operating, which we call a cauſe; and ſo the beginning to be, is perceived to agree with the idea of a cauſe, as is expreſſed in the propoſition: and thus it comes to be a certain propoſition; and ſo may be called a principle of reaſon, as every true propoſition is to him that perceives the certainty of it.

This, my lord, is my way of ideas, and of coming to a certainty by them; which, when your lordſhip has again conſidered, I am apt to think your lordſhip will no more condemn, than I do except againſt your lordſhip's way of arguments or principles of reaſon. Nor will it, I ſuppoſe, any longer offend your lordſhip, under the notion of a new way of reaſoning; ſince I flatter myſelf, both theſe ways will be found to be equally old, one as the other, though perhaps formerly they have not been ſo diſtinctly taken notice of, and the name of ideas is of later date in our Engliſh language.

If your lordſhip ſays, as I think you mean, viz. that my argument to prove a God, is not taken from ideas, your lordſhip will pardon me, if I think otherwiſe. For I beſeech your lordſhip, are not ideas, whoſe agreement or diſagreement, as they are expreſſed in propoſitions, is perceived, immediately or by intuition, the principles of true reaſon? And does not the certainty we have of the truth of theſe propoſitions conſiſt in the perception of ſuch agreement or diſagreement? And does not the agreement or diſagreement depend upon the ideas themſelves? Nay, ſo entirely depend upon the ideas themſelves, that it is impoſſible for the mind, or reaſon, or argument, or any thing to alter it? All that reaſon or the mind does, in reaſoning or arguing, is to find out and obſerve that agreement or diſagreement: and all that argument does is, by an intervening idea, to ſhow it, where an immediate putting the ideas together will not do it.

As for example, in the preſent caſe: the propoſition, of whoſe truth I would be certain, is this: "a know-"ing being has eternally exiſted." Here the ideas joined, joined, are eternal existence, with a knowing being. But does my mind perceive any immediate connexion or repugnancy in these ideas? No. The proposition then at first view affords me no certainty; or, as our English idiom phrases it, it is not certain, or I am not certain of it. But though I am not, yet I would be certain whether it be true or no. What then must I do? Find arguments to prove that it is true, or the contrary. And what is that, but to cast about and find out intermediate ideas, which may show me the necessary connexion or inconsistency of the ideas in the proposition? Either of which, when by these intervening ideas I am brought to perceive, I am then certain that the proposition is true, or I am certain that it is false. As, in the present case, I perceive in myself thought and perception; the idea of actual perception has an evident connexion with an actual being, that doth perceive and think: the idea of an actual thinking being, hath a perceivable connexion with the eternal existence of some knowing being, by the intervention of the negation of all being, or the idea of nothing, which has a necessary connexion with no power, no operation, no causality, no effect, i. e. with nothing. So that the idea of once actually nothing, has a visible connexion with nothing to eternity, for the future; and hence the idea of an actual being, is perceived to have a necessary connexion with some actual being from eternity. And by the like way of ideas, may be perceived the actual existence of a knowing being, to have a connexion with the existence of an actual knowing being from eternity; and the idea of an eternal, actual, knowing being, with the idea of immateriality, by the intervention of the idea of matter, and of its actual division, divisibility, and want of perception, &c. which are the ideas, or, as your lordship is pleased to call them, arguments, I make use of in this proof, which I need not here go over again; and which is partly contained in these following words, which your lordship thus quotes out of the 10th section of the same chapter.

" Again,

" Again, if we ſuppoſe nothing to be firſt, matter " can never begin to be; if bare matter without mo- " tion to be eternal, motion can never begin to be; if " matter and motion be ſuppoſed eternal, thought can " never begin to be: for if matter could produce " thought, then thought muſt be in the power of " matter; and if it be in matter as ſuch, it muſt be " the inſeparable property of all matter; which is con- " trary to the ſenſe and experience of mankind. If " only ſome parts of matter have a power of thinking, " how comes ſo great a difference in the properties of " the ſame matter? What diſpoſition of matter is re- " quired to thinking? And from whence comes it? " Of which no account can be given in reaſon." To which your lordſhip ſubjoins:

" This is the ſubſtance of the argument uſed, to " prove an infinite ſpiritual being, which I am far " from weakening the force of: but that which I de- " ſign, is to ſhow, that the certainty of it is not placed " upon any clear and diſtinct ideas, but upon the force " of reaſon diſtinct from it; which was the thing I " intended to prove."

Your lordſhip ſays, that the certainty of it (I ſuppoſe your lordſhip means the certainty produced by my proof of a Deity) is not placed upon clear and diſtinct ideas. It is placed, among others, upon the ideas of thinking, exiſtence, and matter, which I think are all clear and diſtinct ideas; ſo that there are ſome clear and diſtinct ideas in it: and one can hardly ſay there are not any clear and diſtinct ideas in it, becauſe there is one obſcure and confuſed one in it, viz. that of ſubſtance; which yet hinders not the certainty of the proof.

The words which your lordſhip ſubjoins to the former, viz. " But upon the force of reaſon diſtinct from it;" ſeem to me to ſay, as far as I can underſtand them, that the certainty of my argument for a Deity is placed not on clear and diſtinct ideas, but upon the force of reaſon.

This,

This, among other places before set down, makes me wish your lordship had told us, what you understand by reason; for, in my acceptation of the word reason, I do not see but the same proof may be placed upon clear and distinct ideas, and upon reason too. As I said before, I can perceive no inconsistency or opposition between them, no more than there is any opposition between a clear object and my faculty of seeing, in the certainty of any thing I receive by my eyes; for this certainty may be placed very well on both the clearness of the object, and the exercise of that faculty in me.

Your lordship's next words, I think, should be read thus; "distinct from them:" for if they were intended as they are printed, "distinct from it," I confess I do not understand them. "Certainty not placed on clear "and distinct ideas, but upon the force of reason dis-"tinct from them," my capacity will reach the sense of. But then I cannot but wonder what "distinct "from them" do there; for I know no-body that does not think that reason, or the faculty of reasoning, is distinct from the ideas it makes use of or is employed about, whether those ideas be clear and distinct, or obscure and confused. But if that sentence be to be read as it is printed, viz. "The certainty of it is not "placed upon any clear and distinct ideas, but upon "the force of reason distinct from it;" I acknowledge your lordship's meaning is above my comprehension. Upon the whole matter, my lord, I must confess, that I do not see that what your lordship says you intended here to prove, is proved, viz. that certainty in my proof of a God is not placed on ideas. And next, if it were proved, I do not see how it answers any objection against the Trinity, in point of reason.

Before I go on to what follows, I must beg leave to confess, I am troubled to find these words of your lordship, among those I have above set down out of the foregoing page, viz. allowing the argument to be good; and cannot forbear to wish, that when your lordship was writing this passage, you had had in your mind what you are pleased here to say, viz. that you are far from weakening the force of my argument which I uſed to prove an infinite ſpiritual being.

My lord, your lordſhip is a great man, not only by the dignity your merits are inveſted with, but more by the merits of your parts and learning. Your lordſhip's words carry great weight and authority with them; and he that ſhall quote but a ſaying or a doubt of your lordſhip's, that queſtions the force of my argument for the proof of a God, will think himſelf well founded and to be hearkened to, as gone a great way in the cauſe. Theſe words "allowing the argument to be "good," in the received way of ſpeaking, are uſually taken to ſignify, that he that ſpeaks them, does not judge the argument to be good; but that for diſcourſe-ſake he at preſent admits it. Truly, my lord, till I read theſe words in your lordſhip, I always took it for a good argument; and was ſo fully perſuaded of its goodneſs, that I ſpoke higher of it than of any reaſoning of mine any where, becauſe I thought it equal to a demonſtration. If it be not ſo, it is fit I recall my words, and that I do not betray ſo important and fundamental a truth, by a weak, but over-valued argument: and therefore I cannot, upon this occaſion, but importune your lordſhip, that if your lordſhip (as your words ſeem to intimate) ſees any weakneſs in it, your lordſhip would be pleaſed to ſhow it me; that either I may amend that fault, and make it concluſive, or elſe retract my confidence, and leave that cauſe to thoſe who have ſtrength ſuitable to its weight. But to return to what follows in your lordſhip's next paragraph.

2. The next thing neceſſary to be cleared in this diſpute, is, the diſtinction "between nature and perſon; "and of this we can have no clear and diſtinct idea "from ſenſation or reflection. And yet all our notions "of the doctrine of the Trinity depend upon the right "underſtanding of it. For we muſt talk unintelligibly "about this point, unleſs we have clear and diſtinct "apprehenſions concerning nature and perſon, and the "grounds of identity and diſtinction. But that theſe "come not into our minds by theſe ſimple ideas of "ſenſation and reflection, I ſhall now make it appear."

By

By this it is plain, that the business of the following pages is to make it appear, that "we have no clear "and distinct idea of the distinction of nature and "person, from sensation or reflection:" or, as your lordship expresses it a little lower, "the apprehensions "concerning nature and person, and the grounds of "identity and distinction, come not into our minds by "the simple ideas of sensation and reflection."

And what, pray my lord, can be inferred from hence, if it should be so? Your lordship tells us,

"All our notions of the doctrine of the Trinity de-"pend upon the right understanding of the distinction "between nature and person; and we must talk unin-"telligibly about this point, unless we have clear and "distinct apprehensions concerning nature and person, "and the grounds of identity and distinction."

If it be so, the inference I should draw from thence (if it were fit for me to draw any) would be this, that it concerns those who write on that subject to have themselves, and to lay down to others, clear and distinct apprehensions, or notions, or ideas, (call them what you please) of what they mean by nature and person, and of the grounds of identity and distinction.

This seems, to me, the natural conclusion flowing from your lordship's words; which seem here to suppose clear and distinct apprehensions (something like clear and distinct ideas) necessary for the avoiding unintelligible talk in the doctrine of the Trinity. But I do not see your lordship can, from the necessity of clear and distinct apprehensions of nature and person, &c. in the dispute of the Trinity, bring in one, who has perhaps mistaken the way to clear and distinct notions concerning nature and person, &c. as fit to be answered among those who bring objections against the Trinity in point of reason. I do not see why an unitarian may not as well bring him in, and argue against his Essay, in a chapter that he should write, to answer objections against the unity of God, in point of reason or revelation: for upon what ground soever any one writes in this dispute, or any other, it is not tolerable to talk unintelligibly on either side.

If by the way of ideas, which is that of the author of the Eſſay of Human Underſtanding, a man cannot come to clear and diſtinct apprehenſions concerning nature and perſon; if, as he propoſes from the ſimple ideas of ſenſation and reflection, ſuch apprehenſions cannot be got; it will follow from thence, that he is a miſtaken philoſopher: but it will not follow from thence, that he is not an orthodox Chriſtian, for he might (as he did) write his Eſſay of Human Underſtanding, without any thought of the controverſy between the trinitarians and unitarians: nay, a man might have writ all that is in his book, that never heard one word of any ſuch diſpute.

There is in the world a great and fierce conteſt about nature and grace: it would be very hard for me, if I muſt be brought in as a party on either ſide, becauſe a diſputant, in that controverſy, ſhould think the clear and diſtinct apprehenſions of nature and grace, come not into our minds by the ſimple ideas of ſenſation and reflection. If this be ſo, I may be reckoned among the objectors againſt all ſorts and points of orthodoxy, whenever any one pleaſes: I may be called to account as one heterodox, in the points of free-grace, free-will, predeſtination, original ſin, juſtification by faith, tranſubſtantiation, the pope's ſupremacy, and what not? as well as in the doctrine of the Trinity; and all becauſe they cannot be furniſhed with clear and diſtinct notions of grace, free-will, tranſubſtantiation, &c. by ſenſation or reflection. For in all theſe, or any other points, I do not ſee but there may be complaint made, that they have not always right underſtanding and clear notions of thoſe things, on which the doctrine they diſpute of depends. And it is not altogether unuſual for men to talk unintelligibly to themſelves and others, in theſe and other points of controverſy, for want of clear and diſtinct apprehenſions, or (as I would call them, did not your lordſhip diſlike it) ideas: for all which unintelligible talking, I do not think myſelf accountable, though it ſhould ſo fall out that my way, by ideas, would not help them to what it ſeems is wanting, clear and diſtinct notions. If my way be ineffectual to that purpoſe, purpose, they may, for all me, make use of any other more successful, and leave me out of the controversy, as one useless to either party, for deciding of the question.

Supposing, as your lordship says, and as you have undertaken to make appear, that "the clear and distinct apprehensions concerning nature and person, "and the grounds of identity and distinction, should "not come into the mind by the simple ideas of sensation and reflection;" what, I beseech your lordship, is this to the dispute concerning the Trinity, on either side? And if after your lordship has endeavoured to give clear and distinct apprehensions of nature and person, the disputants in this controversy should still talk unintelligibly about this point, for want of clear and distinct apprehensions concerning nature and person; ought your lordship to be brought in among the partisans on the other side, by any one who writ a Vindication of the Doctrine of the Trinity? In good earnest, my lord, I do not see how the clear and distinct notions of nature and person, not coming into the mind by the simple ideas of sensation and reflection, any more contains any objection against the doctrine of the Trinity, than the clear and distinct apprehensions of original sin, justification, or transubstantiation, not coming to the mind by the simple ideas of sensation and reflection, contains any objection against the doctrine of original sin, justification, or transubstantiation, and so of all the rest of the terms used in any controversy in religion; however your lordship, in a Treatise of the Vindication of the Doctrine of the Trinity, and in the chapter where you make it your business to answer objections in point of reason, set yourself seriously to prove, that "clear and distinct apprehensions concerning nature "and person, and the grounds of identity and distinction, come not into our minds by these simple ideas "of sensation and reflection." In order to the making this appear, we read as followeth:

"As to nature, that is sometimes taken for the "essential property of a thing: as, when we say, that "such a thing is of a different nature from another;

" we mean no more, than it is differenced by ſuch " properties as come to our knowledge. Sometimes " nature is taken for the thing itſelf in which theſe " properties are; and ſo Ariſtotle took nature for a " corporeal ſubſtance, which had the principles of mo- " tion in itſelf; but nature and ſubſtance are of an " equal extent; and ſo that which is the ſubject of " powers and properties, is the nature, whether it be " meant of bodily or ſpiritual ſubſtances."

Your lordſhip, in this paragraph, gives us two ſignifications of the word nature: 1. That it is ſometimes taken for eſſential properties, which I eaſily admit. 2. That ſometimes it is taken for the thing itſelf in which theſe properties are, and conſequently for ſubſtance itſelf. And this your lordſhip proves out of Ariſtotle.

Whether Ariſtotle called the thing itſelf, wherein the eſſential properties are, nature, I will not diſpute: but that your lordſhip thinks fit to call ſubſtance nature, is evident. And from thence I think your lordſhip endeavours to prove in the following words, that we can have from ideas no clear and diſtinct apprehenſions concerning nature. Your lordſhip's words are:

" I grant, that by ſenſation and reflection we come " to know the powers and properties of things; but " our reaſon is ſatisfied that there muſt be ſomething " beyond theſe, becauſe it is impoſſible that they ſhould " ſubſiſt by themſelves. So that the nature of things " properly belongs to our reaſon, and not to mere " ideas."

How we come by the idea of ſubſtance, from the ſimple ones of ſenſation and reflection, I have endeavoured to ſhow in another place, and therefore ſhall not trouble your lordſhip with it here again. But what your lordſhip infers, in theſe words, " So that the na- " ture of things properly belongs to our reaſon, and " not to mere ideas;" I do not well underſtand. Your lordſhip indeed here again ſeems to oppoſe reaſon and ideas; and to that I ſay, mere ideas are the objects of the underſtanding, and reaſon is one of the faculties of the underſtanding employed about them; and that the under-understanding, or reason, which-ever your lordship pleases to call it, makes or forms, out of the simple ones that come in by sensation and reflection, all the other ideas, whether general, relative, or complex, by abstracting, comparing, and compounding its positive simple ideas, whereof it cannot make or frame any one, but what it receives by sensation or reflection. And therefore I never denied that reason was employed about our particular simple ideas, to make out of them ideas general, relative, and complex; nor about all our ideas, whether simple or complex, positive or relative, general or particular: it being the proper business of reason, in the search after truth and knowledge, to find out the relations between all these sorts of ideas, in the perception whereof knowledge and certainty of truth consists.

These, my lord, are, in short, my notions about ideas, their original and formation, and of the use the mind, or reason, makes of them in knowledge. Whether your lordship thinks fit to call this a new way of reasoning, must be left to your lordship; whether it be a right way, is that alone which I am concerned for. But your lordship seems all along (I crave leave here once for all to take notice of it) to have some particular exception against ideas, and particularly clear and distinct ideas, as if they were not to be used, or were of no use in reason and knowledge; or, as if reason were opposed to them, or leads us into the knowledge and certainty of things without them; or, the knowledge of things did not at all depend on them. I beg your lordship's pardon for expressing myself so variously and doubtfully in this matter; the reason whereof is, because I must own, that I do not every-where clearly understand what your lordship means, when you speak, as you do, of ideas; as if I ascribed more to them, than belonged to them; or expected more of them, than they could do; v. g. where your lordship says,

" But is all this contained in the simple idea of these " operations? And again, " so that here it is not the " clearness of the idea, but an immediate act of per- " ception, which is the true ground of certainty." And farther, " so that our certainty is not from the " ideas themſelves, but from the evidence of reaſon." And in another place, " it is not the idea that makes " us certain, but the argument from that which we " perceive in and about ourſelves. Is it from the clear " and diſtinct idea of it? No! but from this argu- " ment." And here, " the nature of things belongs " to our reaſon, and not to mere ideas."

Theſe, and ſeveral the like paſſages, your lordſhip has againſt what your lordſhip calls " this new way of " ideas, and an admirable way to bring us to the cer- " tainty of reaſon."

I never ſaid nor thought ideas, nor any thing elſe, could bring us to the certainty of reaſon, without the exerciſe of reaſon. And then, my lord, if we will employ our minds, and exerciſe our reaſon, to bring us to certainty; what, I beſeech you, ſhall they be employed about but ideas? For ideas, in my ſenſe of the word, are, " whatſoever is the object of " the underſtanding, when a man thinks; " or, whatever it is the mind can be em- " ployed about in thinking." And again, I have theſe words, " whatſoever is the immediate object " of perception, thought, or underſtanding, " that I call idea." So that my way of ideas, and of coming to certainty by them, is to employ our minds in thinking upon ſomething; and I do not ſee but your lordſhip yourſelf, and every body elſe, muſt make uſe of my way of ideas, unleſs they can find out a way that will bring them to certainty, by thinking on nothing. So that let certainty be placed as much as it will on reaſon, let the nature of things belong as properly as it will to our reaſon, it will nevertheleſs be true, that certainty conſiſts in the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of ideas; and that the complex idea the word nature ſtands for, is ultimately made up of the ſimple ideas of ſenſation and reflection. Your lordſhip proceeds:

B. i. c. 1, § 8.

B. ii. c. 8, § 8.

" But we muſt yet proceed farther: for nature may " be conſidered two ways.

" 1. As it is in diſtinct individuals, as the nature of " a man is equally in Peter, James, and John; and this

" is

" is the common nature, with a particular ſubſiſtence " proper to each of them. For the nature of man, as " in Peter, is diſtinct from the ſame nature, as it is in " James and John; otherwiſe, they would be but one " perſon, as well as have the ſame nature. And this " diſtinction of perſons in them, is diſcerned both by " our ſenſes, as to their different accidents; and by " our reaſon, becauſe they have a ſeparate exiſtence; " not coming into it at once, and in the ſame manner."

2. " Nature may be conſidered abſtractly, without " reſpect to individual perſons; and then it makes an " entire notion of itſelf. For however the ſame nature " may be in different individuals, yet the nature itſelf " remains one and the ſame; which appears from this " evident reaſon, that otherwiſe every individual muſt " make a different kind."

I am ſo little confident of my own quickneſs, and of having got from what your lordſhip has ſaid here, a clear and diſtinct apprehenſion concerning nature, that I muſt beg your lordſhip's pardon, if I ſhould happen to diſſatisfy your lordſhip, by talking unintelligibly, or beſides the purpoſe about it. I muſt then confeſs to your lordſhip, 1. that I do not clearly underſtand whether your lordſhip, in theſe two paragraphs, ſpeaks of nature, as ſtanding for eſſential properties; or of nature, as ſtanding for ſubſtance: and yet it is of great moment in the caſe, becauſe your lordſhip allows, that the notion of nature in the former of theſe ſenſes, may be had from ſenſation and reflection; but of nature in the latter ſenſe, your lordſhip ſays, " it properly be- " longs to reaſon, and not mere ideas." 2. Your lordſhip's ſaying, in the firſt of theſe paragraphs, " that " the nature of a man, as in Peter, is diſtinct from the " ſame nature as it is in James and John;" and in the ſecond of them, " that however the ſame nature may " be in different individuals, yet the nature itſelf re- " mains one and the ſame;" does not give me ſo clear and diſtinct an apprehenſion concerning nature, that I know which, in your lordſhip's opinion, I ought to think, either that one and the ſame nature is in Peter and John; or that a nature diſtinct from that in John, is in Peter;

Peter: and the reaſon is, becauſe I cannot, in my way by ideas, well put together one and the ſame and diſtinct. My apprehenſion concerning the nature of man, or the common nature of man, if your lordſhip will, upon this occaſion, give me leave to trouble your lordſhip with it, is, in ſhort, this; that it is a collection of ſeveral ideas, combined into one complex, abſtract idea, which when they are found united in any individual exiſting, though joined in that exiſtence with ſeveral other ideas, that individual or particular being is truly ſaid to have the nature of a man, or the nature of a man to be in him; for as much as all theſe ſimple ideas are found united in him, which anſwer the complex, abſtract idea, to which the ſpecifick name man is given by any one; which abſtract, ſpecifick idea, he keeps the ſame, when he applies the ſpecifick name ſtanding for it, to diſtinct individuals; i. e. no-body changes his idea of a man, when he ſays Peter is a man, from that idea which he makes the name man to ſtand for, when he calls John a man. This ſhort way by ideas has not, I confeſs, thoſe different, and more learned and ſcholaſtic conſiderations ſet down by your lordſhip. But how they are neceſſary, or at all tend to prove what your lordſhip has propoſed to prove, viz. that we have no clear and diſtinct idea of nature, from the ſimple ideas got from ſenſation and reflection, I confeſs I do not yet ſee. But your lordſhip goes on to it.

" Let us now ſee how far theſe things can come from " our ſimple ideas, by reflection and ſenſation. And I " ſhall lay down the hypotheſis of thoſe, who reſolve " our certainty into ideas, as plainly and intelligibly " as I can."

Here I am got again into the plural number; for though it be ſaid " the hypotheſis of thoſe," yet my words alone are quoted for that hypotheſis, and not a word of any body elſe in this whole buſineſs concerning nature. What they are, I ſhall give the reader, as your lordſhip has ſet them down.

Human Underſtanding. b. ii. c. 30, 31.

1. We are told, " that all ſimple ideas " are true and adequate. Not, that they " are the true repreſentations of things " without

" without us; but that they are the true effects of " such powers in them, as produce such sensation " within us. So that really we can understand nothing " certainly by them, but the effects they have upon " us."

For these words of mine, I find Human Understanding, B. ii. c. 30, 31. quoted; but I crave leave to observe to your lordship, that in neither of these chapters do I find the words, as they stand here in your lordship's book. In B. ii. c. 31. § 2. of my Essay, I find these words, " that all our simple ideas are adequate, " because being nothing but the effects of certain " powers in things fitted or ordained by God, to pro- " duce such sensations in us; they cannot but be cor- " respondent and adequate to those powers." And in chap. 30. sect. 2. I say, that " our simple ideas are all " real, all agree to the reality of things. Not that " they are all of them the images or representations of " what does exist; the contrary whereof, in all but " the primary qualities of bodies, hath been already " shewed."

These are the words in my book, from whence those in your lordship's seem to be gathered, but with some difference: for I do not remember that I have any where said, of all our simple ideas, that they are none of them true representations of things without us; as the words I find in your lordship's book, seem to make me say. The contrary whereof appears from the words which I have set down, out of chap. 30. where I deny only the simple ideas of secondary qualities to be representations; but do every-where affirm, that the simple ideas of primary qualities are the images or representations of what does exist without us. So that my words, in the chapters quoted by your lordship, not saying that all our simple ideas are only effects, and none of them representations, your lordship, I humbly conceive, cannot, upon that account, infer from my words, as you do here, viz. " so that really we can " understand nothing certainly by them."

The remaining words of this sentence, I must beg your lordship's pardon, if I profess I do not understand:

ſtand: they are theſe; " but the effects they have upon " us." They here, and them in the preceding words to which they are joined, ſignify ſimple ideas; for it is of thoſe your lordſhip infers, " ſo that really we can " underſtand nothing certainly by them, but the effects " they have upon us." And then your lordſhip's words import thus much, " ſo that really we can un- " derſtand nothing certainly by ſimple ideas, but the " effects ſimple ideas have upon us:" which I cannot underſtand to be what your lordſhip intended to infer from the preceding words taken to be mine. For I ſuppoſe your lordſhip argues, from my opinion concerning the ſimple ideas of ſecondary qualities, the little real knowledge we ſhould receive from them, if it be true, that they are not repreſentations or images of any thing in bodies, but only effects of certain powers in bodies to produce them in us: and in that ſenſe I take the liberty to read your lordſhip's words thus; ſo that we can really underſtand nothing certainly but [theſe ideas] by the effects [thoſe powers] have upon us. To which I anſwer,

1. That we as certainly know and diſtinguiſh things by ideas, ſuppoſing them nothing but effects produced in us by theſe powers, as if they were repreſentations. I can as certainly, when I have occaſion for either, diſtinguiſh gold from ſilver by the colour, or wine from water by the taſte; if the colour of the one, or the taſte of the other, be only an effect of their powers on me; as if that colour and that taſte were repreſentations and reſemblances of ſomething in thoſe bodies.

2. I anſwer; that we have certainly as much pleaſure and delight by thoſe ideas, one way as the other. The ſmell of a violet or taſte of a peach gives me as real and certain delight, if it be only an effect, as if it were the true reſemblance of ſomething in that flower and fruit. And I a little the more wonder to hear your lordſhip complain ſo much of want of certainty in this caſe, when I read theſe words of your lordſhip in another place:

" That from the powers and properties of things " which are knowable by us, we may know as much of " the

" the internal eſſence of things, as thoſe powers and " properties diſcover. I do not ſay, that we can know " all eſſences of things alike; nor that we can attain to " a perfect underſtanding of all that belong to them: " but if we can know ſo much, as that there are certain " beings in the world, endued with ſuch diſtinct powers " and properties; what is it we complain of, in order " to our certainty of things? But we do not ſee the " bare eſſence of things. What is that bare eſſence, " without the powers and properties belonging to it? " It is that internal conſtitution of things, from whence " thoſe powers and properties flow. Suppoſe we be " ignorant of this (as we are like to be, for any diſco- " veries that have been yet made) that is a good argu- " ment, to prove the uncertainty of philoſophical ſpe- " culations, about the real eſſence of things; but it is " no prejudice to us, who inquire after the certainty of " ſuch eſſences. For although we cannot comprehend " the internal frame or conſtitution of things, nor in " what manner they do flow from the ſubſtance; yet by " them we certainly know, that there are ſuch eſſences, " and that they are diſtinguiſhed from each other by " their powers and properties."

Give me leave, if your lordſhip pleaſe, to argue after the ſame manner in the preſent caſe: that from theſe ſimple ideas which are knowable by us, we know as much of the powers and internal conſtitutions of things, as theſe powers diſcover; and, if we can know ſo much, as that there are ſuch powers, and that there are certain beings in the world, endued with ſuch powers and properties, that, by theſe ſimple ideas that are but the effects of theſe powers, we can as certainly diſtinguiſh the beings wherein thoſe powers are, and receive as certain advantage from them, as if thoſe ſimple ideas were reſemblances: what is it we complain of the want of, in order to our certainty of things? But we do not ſee that internal conſtitution from whence thoſe powers flow. Suppoſe we be ignorant of this (as we are like to be for any diſcoveries that have been yet made) that is a good argument, to ſhow how ſhort our philoſophical ſpeculations are about the real, internal conſtitutions tions of things; but is no prejudice to us, who by thoſe ſimple ideas ſearch out, find, and diſtinguiſh things for our uſes. For though, by thoſe ideas which are not reſemblances, we cannot comprehend the internal frame or conſtitution of things, nor in what manner theſe ideas are produced in us, by thoſe powers; yet by them we certainly know, that there are ſuch eſſences or conſtitutions of theſe ſubſtances, that have thoſe powers, whereby they regularly produce thoſe ideas in us; and that they are diſtinguiſhed from each other by thoſe powers.

The next words your lordſhip ſets down, as out of my book, are:

" 2. All our ideas of ſubſtances are imperfect and " inadequate, becauſe they refer to the real eſſences of " things of which we are ignorant, and no man knows " what ſubſtance is in itſelf: and they are all falſe, " when looked on as the repreſentations of the unknown " eſſences of things."

In theſe too, my lord, you muſt give me leave to take notice, that there is a little variation from my words: for I do not ſay, " that all our ideas " of ſubſtances are imperfect and inade- " quate, becauſe they refer to the real eſſences of " things;" for ſome people may not refer them to real eſſences. But I do ſay, " that all ideas of ſubſtances, " which are referred to real eſſences, are in that reſpect " inadequate:" As may be ſeen more at large in that chapter.

B. 2. c. 21.

Your lordſhip's next quotation has in it ſomething of a like ſlip. The words which your lordſhip ſets down, are,

" 3. Abſtract ideas are only general names, made by " ſeparating circumſtances of time and place, &c. from " them, which are only the inventions and creatures of " the underſtanding."

For theſe your lordſhip quotes chap. iii. § 6. of my third book; where my words are, " The next thing to " be conſidered, is, how general words come to be " made. For ſince all things that exiſt are only parti- " culars, how come we by general terms? or where " find we thoſe general natures they are ſuppoſed to " ſtand

" ſtand for? Words become general, by being made " ſigns of general ideas; and ideas become general, by " ſeparating from them the circumſtances of time or " place, and any other ideas that may determine them " to this or that particular exiſtence. By this way of " abſtraction, they are made capable of repreſenting " more individuals than one; each of which, having in " it a conformity to that abſtract idea, is (as we call it) " of that ſort." By which words it appears, that I am far enough from ſaying, " that abſtract ideas are only " general names." Your lordſhip's next quotation out of my book, is,

" 4. Eſſence may be taken two ways: 1. For the " real, internal, unknown conſtitutions of things; and " in this ſenſe it is underſtood as to particular things. " 2. For the abſtract idea; and one is ſaid to be the " nominal, the other the real eſſence. And the nomi- " nal eſſences only are immutable, and are helps to " enable them to conſider things, and to diſcourſe of " them."

Here too, I think, there are ſome words left out, which are neceſſary to make my meaning clearly underſtood; which your lordſhip will find, if you think fit to give yourſelf the trouble to caſt your eye again on that chapter, which you here quote. But not diſcerning clearly what uſe your lordſhip makes of them, as they are either in your lordſhip's quotation, or in my book, I ſhall not trouble your lordſhip about them. Your lordſhip goes on:

" But two things are granted, which tend to clear " this matter.

" 1. That there is a real eſſence, which is the foun- " dation of powers and properties.

" 2. That we may know theſe powers and proper- " ties, although we are ignorant of the real eſſence."

If by that indefinite expreſſion, " we may know theſe " powers and properties," your lordſhip means, " that " we may know ſome of the powers and properties that " depend on the real eſſences of ſubſtances;" I grant it to be my meaning. If your lordſhip, in theſe words, comprehends all their powers and properties, that goes beyond my meaning. From theſe two things, which I grant your lordſhip ſays, you infer,

" 1. That from thoſe true and adequate ideas, which " we have of the modes and properties of things, " we have ſufficient certainty of the real eſſence of " them: for theſe ideas are allowed to be true; and " either by them we may judge of the truth of things, " or we can make no judgment at all of any thing with- " out ourſelves.

" If our ideas be only the effects we ſee of the powers " of things without us; yet our reaſon muſt be ſatis- " fied, that there could be no ſuch powers, unleſs there " were ſome real beings which had them. So that " either we may be certain, by theſe effects, of the real " being of things; or it is not poſſible, as we are framed, " to have any certainty at all of any thing without our- " ſelves."

All this, if I miſtake not your lordſhip, is only to prove, that by the ideas of properties and powers which we obſerve in things, our reaſon muſt be ſatisfied that there are without us real beings, with real eſſences: which being that which I readily own and have ſaid in my book, I cannot but acknowledge myſelf obliged to your lordſhip, for being at the pains to collect places out of my book to prove what I hold in it; and the more, becauſe your lordſhip does it by ways and ſteps, which I ſhould never poſſibly have thought of. Your lordſhip's next inference is:

" 2. That from the powers and properties of things, " which are knowable by us, we may know as much " of the internal eſſence of things, as thoſe powers and " properties diſcover. I do not ſay, that we can know " all eſſences of things alike; nor that we can attain to " a perfect underſtanding of all that belong to them: " but if we can know ſo much, as that there are cer- " tain beings in the world, endued with ſuch diſtinct " powers and properties; what is it we complain of the " want of, in order to our certainty of things? But we " do not ſee the bare eſſence of things. What is that " bare eſſence without the powers and properties be-

" longing to it? It is that internal constitution of things, " from whence those powers and properties flow. Sup- " pose we be ignorant of this (as we are like to be, for " any discoveries that have been yet made) that is a " good argument to prove the uncertainty of philoso- " phical speculations, about the real essences of things; " but it is no prejudice to us, who inquire after the " certainty of such essences. For although we cannot " comprehend the internal frame or constitution of " things, nor in what manner they do flow from the " substance; yet, by them, we certainly know that " there are such essences, and that they are distinguished " from each other by their powers and properties."

This second inference seems to be nothing but a reproof to those who complain, " that they do not see the " bare essences of things." Complaining that God did not make us otherwise than he has, and with larger capacities than he has thought fit to give us, is, I confess, a fault worthy of your lordship's reproof. But to say, that if we knew the real essences or internal constitutions of those beings, some of whose properties we know, we should have much more certain knowledge concerning those things and their properties, I am sure is true, and I think no faulty complaining; and if it be, I must own myself to your lordship to be one of those complainers.

But your lordship asks, " what is it we complain of " the want of, in order to our certainty of things?"

If your lordship means, as your words seem to import, " what is it we complain of, in order to our cer- " tainty," that those properties are the properties of some beings, or that something does exist when those properties exist? I answer, we complain of the want of nothing in order to that certainty, or such a certainty as that is. But there are other very desirable certainties, or other parts of knowledge concerning the same things, which we may want, when we have those certainties. Knowing the colour, figure, and smell of hyssop, I can, when I see hyssop, know so much, as that there is a certain being in the world, endued with such distinct powers and properties; and yet I may juſtly complain, that I want ſomething in order to certainty, that hyſſop will cure a bruiſe or a cough, or that it will kill moths; or, uſed in a certain way, harden iron; or an hundred other uſeful properties that may be in it, which I ſhall never know; and yet might be certain of, if I knew the real eſſences, or internal conſtitutions of things, on which their properties depend.

Your lordſhip agreeing with me, that the real eſſence is that internal conſtitution of things, from whence their powers and properties flow; adds farther, "ſuppoſe we be ignorant of this [eſſence] as we are like "to be for any diſcoveries that have been yet made, "that is a good argument to prove the uncertainty "of philoſophical ſpeculations about the real eſſences "of things; but it is no prejudice to us, who inquire "after the certainty of ſuch eſſences."

I know nobody that ever denied the certainty of ſuch real eſſences or internal conſtitutions, in things that do exiſt, if it be that that your lordſhip means by certainty of ſuch eſſences. If it be any other certainty that your lordſhip inquires after, relating to ſuch eſſences, I confeſs I know not what it is, ſince your lordſhip acknowledges, "we are ignorant of thoſe real eſſences, thoſe "internal conſtitutions, and are like to be ſo;" and ſeem to think it the incurable cauſe of uncertainty in philoſophical ſpeculations.

Your lordſhip adds, "for although we cannot com-"prehend the internal frame and conſtitution of things, "nor in what manner they do flow from the ſub-"ſtance."

Here I muſt acknowledge to your lordſhip, that my notion of theſe eſſences differs a little from your lordſhip's; for I do not take them to flow from the ſubſtance in any created being, but to be in every thing that internal conſtitution, or frame, or modification of the ſubſtance, which God in his wiſdom and good pleaſure thinks fit to give to every particular creature, when he gives a being: and ſuch eſſences I grant there are in all things that exiſt. Your lordſhip's third inference begins thus:

"3. The

" 3. The eſſences of things, as they are knowable " by us, have a reality in them: for they are founded " on the natural conſtitution of things."

I think the real eſſences of things are not ſo much founded on, as that they are the very real conſtitution of things, and therefore I eaſily grant there is reality in them; and it was from that reality that I called them real eſſences. But yet from hence I cannot agree to what follows:

" And however the abſtracted ideas are the work of " the mind, yet they are not mere creatures of the " mind; as appears by an inſtance produced of the " eſſence of the ſun being in one ſingle individual; in " which caſe it is granted, that the idea may be ſo ab- " ſtracted, that more ſuns might agree in it, and it is " as much a ſort, as if there were as many ſuns as " there are ſtars. So that here we have a real eſſence " ſubſiſting in one individual, but capable of being " multiplied into more, and the ſame eſſence remain- " ing. But in this one ſun there is a real eſſence, and " not a mere nominal or abſtracted eſſence: but ſup- " poſe there were more ſuns; would not each of them " have the real eſſence of the ſun? For what is it " makes the ſecond ſun to be a true ſun, but having " the ſame real eſſence with the firſt? If it were but a " nominal eſſence, then the ſecond would have nothing " but the name."

This, my lord, as I underſtand it, is to prove, that the abſtract, general eſſence of any ſort of things, or things of the ſame denomination, v. g. of man or mari- gold, hath a real being out of the underſtanding; which I confeſs, my lord, I am not able to conceive. Your lordſhip's proof here brought out of my Eſſay, con- cerning the ſun, I humbly conceive will not reach it: becauſe what is ſaid there, does not at all concern the real, but nominal eſſence; as is evident from hence, that the idea I ſpeak of there, is a complex idea; but we have no complex idea of the internal conſtitution, or real eſſence, of the ſun. Beſides, I ſay expreſsly, that our diſtinguiſhing ſubſtances into ſpecies by names, is not at all founded on their real eſſences. So that the ſun being one of theſe ſubſtances, I cannot, in the place quoted by your lordſhip, be ſuppoſed to mean by eſſence of the ſun, the real eſſence of the ſun, unleſs I had ſo expreſſed it. But all this argument will be at an end, when your lordſhip ſhall have explained what you mean by theſe words, "true ſun." In my ſenſe of them, any thing will be a true ſun, to which the name ſun may be truly and properly applied; and to that ſubſtance or thing, the name ſun may be truly and properly applied, which has united in it that combination of ſenſible qualities, by which any thing elſe that is called ſun is diſtinguiſhed from other ſubſtances, i. e. by the nominal eſſence: and thus our ſun is denominated and diſtinguiſhed from a fixed ſtar; not by a real eſſence that we do not know (for if we did, it is poſſible we ſhould find the real eſſence or conſtitution of one of the fixed ſtars to be the ſame with that of our ſun) but by a complex idea of ſenſible qualities co-exiſting; which, wherever they are found, make a true ſun. And thus I crave leave to anſwer your lordſhip's queſtion, "for "what is it makes the ſecond ſun to be a true ſun, but "having the ſame real eſſence with the firſt? If it were "but a nominal eſſence, then the ſecond would have "nothing but the name."

I humbly conceive, if it had the nominal eſſence, it would have ſomething beſides the name, viz. that nominal eſſence, which is ſufficient to denominate it truly a ſun, or to make it be a true ſun, though we know nothing of that real eſſence whereon that nominal one depends. Your lordſhip will then argue, that that real eſſence is in the ſecond ſun, and makes the ſecond ſun. I grant it, when the ſecond ſun comes to exiſt, ſo as to be perceived by us to have all the ideas contained in our complex idea, i. e. in our nominal eſſence of a ſun. For ſhould it be true (as is now believed by aſtronomers) that the real eſſence of the ſun were in any of the fixed ſtars, yet ſuch a ſtar could not for that be by us called a ſun, whilſt it anſwers not our complex idea or nominal eſſence of a ſun. But how far that will prove, that the eſſences of things, as they are knowable by us, have a reality in them, diſtinct from that of abſtract abstract ideas in the mind, which are merely creatures of the mind, I do not see; and we shall farther inquire, in considering your lordship's following words:

"Therefore there must be a real essence in every "individual of the same kind." Yes, and I beg leave of your lordship to say, of a different kind too. For that alone is it which makes it to be what it is.

That every individual substance which has a real, internal, individual constitution, i. e. a real essence, that makes it to be what it is, I readily grant. Upon this your lordship says,

"Peter, James, and John are all true and real men." Answ. Without doubt, supposing them to be men, they are true and real men, i. e. supposing the name of that species belongs to them. And so three bobaques are all true and real bobaques, supposing the name of that species of animals belongs to them.

For I beseech your lordship to consider, whether in your way of arguing, by naming them Peter, James, and John, names familiar to us, as appropriated to individuals of the species man, your lordship does not at first suppose them men; and then very safely ask, whether they be not all true and real men? But if I should ask your lordship, whether Weweena, Chuckerey and Cousheda, were true and real men or no? Your lordship would not be able to tell me, until I having pointed out to your lordship the individuals called by those names, your lordship, by examining whether they had in them those sensible qualities, which your lordship has combined into that complex idea, to which you give the specific name man, determined them all, or some of them, to be the species which you call man, and so to be true and real men: which when your lordship has determined, it is plain you did it by that which is only the nominal essence, as not knowing the real one. But your lordship farther asks.

"What is it makes Peter, James, and John, real "men? Is it the attributing the general name to them? "No certainly; but that the true and real essence of a "man is in every one of them."

If when your lordſhip aſks, what makes them men? your lordſhip uſed the word, making, in the proper ſenſe for the efficient cauſe, and in that ſenſe it were true, that the eſſence of a man, i. e. the ſpecific eſſence of that ſpecies, made a man; it would undoubtedly follow, that this ſpecific eſſence had a reality beyond that of being only a general abſtract idea in the mind. But when it is ſaid, "that it is the true and "real eſſence of a man in every one of them that makes "Peter, James, and John, true and real men;" the true and real meaning of theſe words is no more, but that the eſſence of that ſpecies, i. e. the properties anſwering the complex abſtract idea, to which the ſpecific name is given, being found in them, that makes them be properly and truly called men, or is the reaſon why they are called men. Your lordſhip adds,

"And we muſt be as certain of this, as we are that "they are men."

How, I beſeech your lordſhip, are we certain, that they are men, but only by our ſenſes, finding thoſe properties in them which anſwer the abſtract complex idea, which is in our minds of the ſpecific idea, to which we have annexed the ſpecific name man? This I take to be the true meaning of what your lordſhip ſays in the next words, viz. "they take their denomi-"nation of being men, from that common nature or "eſſence which is in them;" and I am apt to think, theſe words will not hold true in any other ſenſe.

Your lordſhip's fourth inference begins thus:

"That the general idea is not made from the ſimple "ideas, by the mere act of the mind abſtracting from "circumſtances, but from reaſon and conſideration of "the nature of things."

I thought, my lord, that reaſon and conſideration had been acts of the mind, mere acts of the mind, when any thing was done by them. Your lordſhip gives a reaſon for it, viz.

"For when we ſee ſeveral individuals that have the "ſame powers and properties, we thence infer, that "there muſt be ſomething common to all, which makes "them of one kind,"

I grant

I grant the inference to be true; but must beg leave to deny that this proves, that the general idea the name is annexed to, is not made by the mind. I have said, and it agrees with what your lordship here says, that the mind, "in making its complex ideas "of substances, only follows nature, and "puts no ideas together, which are not "supposed to have an union in nature: no-body joins "the voice of a sheep with the shape of an horse; nor "the colour of lead, with the weight and fixedness of "gold, to be the complex ideas of any real substances; "unless he has a mind to fill his head with chimeras, "and his discourse with unintelligible words. Men "observing certain qualities always joined and existing "together, therein copied nature, and of ideas so united, "made their complex ones of substances, &c." Which is very little different from what your lordship here says, that it is from our observation of individuals, that we come to infer, "that there is something common "to them all." But I do not see how it will thence follow, that the general or specific idea is not made by the mere act of the mind. No, says your lordship; B. iii. c. 6. § 28, 29.

"There is something common to them all, which "makes them of one kind; and if the difference of "kinds be real, that which makes them all of one kind "must not be a nominal, but real essence."

This may be some objection to the name of nominal essence; but is, as I humbly conceive, none to the thing designed by it. There is an internal constitution of things, on which their properties depend. This your lordship and I are agreed of, and this we call the real essence. There are also certain complex ideas, or combinations of these properties in men's minds, to which they commonly annex specific names, or names of sorts or kinds of things. This, I believe, your lordship does not deny. These complex ideas, for want of a better name, I have called nominal essences; how properly, I will not dispute. But if any one will help me to a better name for them, I am ready to receive it; till then I must, to express myself, use this. Now, my lord, body, life, and the power of reasoning, being not the real eſſence of a man, as I believe your lordſhip will agree: will your lordſhip ſay, that they are not enough to make the thing wherein they are found, of the kind called man, and not of the kind called baboon, becauſe the difference of theſe kinds is real? If this be not real enough to make the thing of one kind and not of another, I do not ſee how animal rationale can be enough to diſtinguiſh a man from an horſe: for that is but the nominal, not real eſſence of that kind, deſigned by the name man. And yet, I ſuppoſe, every one thinks it real enough, to make a real difference between that and other kinds. And if nothing will ſerve the turn, to make things of one kind and not of another (which, as I have ſhowed, ſignifies no more but ranking of them under different ſpecific names) but their real, unknown conſtitutions, which are the real eſſences we are ſpeaking of, I fear it would be a long while before we ſhould have really different kinds of ſubſtances, or diſtinct names for them; unleſs we could diſtinguiſh them by theſe differences, of which we have no diſtinct conceptions. For I think it would not be readily anſwered me, if I ſhould demand, wherein lies the real difference in the internal conſtitution of a ſtag from that of a buck, which are each of them very well known to be of one kind, and not of the other; and no-body queſtions but that the kinds whereof each of them is, are really different. Your lordſhip farther ſays,

" And this difference doth not depend upon the " complex ideas of ſubſtances, whereby men arbitrarily " join modes together in their minds."

I confeſs, my lord, I know not what to ſay to this, becauſe I do not know what theſe complex ideas of ſubſtances are, whereby men arbitrarily join modes together in their minds. But I am apt to think there is a miſtake in the matter, by the words that follow, which are theſe:

" For let them miſtake in their complication of " ideas, either in leaving out or putting in what doth " not belong to them; and let their ideas be what they " pleaſe,

" pleaſe, the real eſſence of a man, and an horſe, and " a tree, are juſt what they were."

The miſtake I ſpoke of, I humbly ſuppoſe is this, that things are here taken to be diſtinguiſhed by their real eſſences; when by the very way of ſpeaking of them, it is clear, that they are already diſtinguiſhed by their nominal eſſences, and are ſo taken to be. For what, I beſeech your lordſhip, does your lordſhip mean, when you ſay, " the real eſſence of a man, and an horſe, and a tree;" but that there are ſuch kinds already ſet out by the ſignification of theſe names, man, horſe, tree? And what, I beſeech your lordſhip, is the ſignification of each of theſe ſpecific names, but the complex idea it ſtands for? And that complex idea is the nominal eſſence, and nothing elſe. So that taking man, as your lordſhip does here, to ſtand for a kind or ſort of individuals; all which agree in that common, complex idea, which that ſpecific name ſtands for; it is certain that the real eſſence of all the individuals, comprehended under the ſpecific name man, in your uſe of it, would be juſt the ſame, let others leave out or put into their complex idea of man what they pleaſe; becauſe the real eſſence on which that unaltered complex idea, i. e. thoſe properties depend, muſt neceſſarily be concluded to be the ſame.

For I take it for granted, that in uſing the name man, in this place, your lordſhip uſes it for that complex idea which is in your lordſhip's mind of that ſpecies. So that your lordſhip, by putting it for, or ſubſtituting it in, the place of that complex idea, where you ſay, the real eſſence of it is juſt as it was, or the very ſame it was; does ſuppoſe the idea it ſtands for to be ſteadily the ſame. For if I change the ſignification of the word man, whereby it may not comprehend juſt the ſame individuals which in your lordſhip's ſenſe it does, but ſhut out ſome of thoſe that to your lordſhip are men in your ſignification of the word man, or take in others to which your lordſhip does not allow the name man: I do not think your lordſhip will ſay, that the real eſſence of man, in both theſe ſenſes, is the ſame: and yet your lordſhip ſeems to ſay ſo, when you ſay, ſay, " let men miſtake in the complication of their " ideas, either in leaving out or putting in what doth " not belong to them; and let their ideas be what they " pleaſe; the real eſſence of the individuals compre- " hended under the names annexed to theſe ideas, will " be the ſame:" for ſo, I humbly conceive, it muſt be put, to make out what your lordſhip aims at. For as your lordſhip puts it by the name of man, or any other ſpecific name, your lordſhip ſeems to me to ſuppoſe, that that name ſtands for, and not for, the ſame idea, at the ſame time.

For example, my lord, let your lordſhip's idea, to which you annex the ſign man, be a rational animal; let another man's idea be a rational animal of ſuch a ſhape; let a third man's idea be of an animal of ſuch a ſize and ſhape, leaving out rationality; let a fourth's be an animal with a body of ſuch a ſhape, and an immaterial ſubſtance, with a power of reaſoning; let a fifth leave out of his idea an immaterial ſubſtance: it is plain every one of theſe will call his a man, as well as your lordſhip; and yet it is as plain that man, as ſtanding for all theſe diſtinct, complex ideas, cannot be ſuppoſed to have the ſame internal conſtitution, i. e. the ſame real eſſence. The truth is, every diſtinct, abſtract idea, with a name to it, makes a real, diſtinct kind, whatever the real eſſence (which we know not of any of them) be.

And therefore I grant it true, what your lordſhip ſays in the next words, " and let the nominal eſſences differ " never ſo much, the real, common eſſence or nature " of the ſeveral kinds, is not at all altered by them;" i. e. that our thoughts or ideas cannot alter the real conſtitutions that are in things that exiſt; there is nothing more certain. But yet it is true, that the change of ideas to which we annex them, can and does alter the ſignification of their names, and thereby alter the kinds, which by theſe names we rank and ſort them into. Your lordſhip farther adds, unchangeable? Not of any thing that exists, but of God alone; for they may be changed all as easily by that hand that made them, as the internal frame of a watch. What then is it that is unchangeable? The internal constitution or real essence of a species: which, in plain English, is no more but this, whilst the same specific name, v. g. of man, horse or tree, is annexed to, or made the sign of the same abstract, complex idea, under which I rank several individuals, it is impossible but the real constitution on which that unaltered complex idea, or nominal essence, depends, must be the same: i. e. in other words, where we find all the same properties, we have reason to conclude there is the same real, internal constitution, from which those properties flow.

" And theſe real eſſences are unchangeable, i. e. the " internal conſtitutions are unchangeable." Of what, I beſeech your lordſhip, are the internal conſtitutions unchange-

But your lordship proves the real essences to be unchangeable, because God makes them, in these following words:

" For however there may happen some variety in " individuals by particular accidents, yet the essences of " men and horses, and trees, remain always the same; " because they do not depend on the ideas of men, but " on the will of the Creator, who hath made several " sorts of beings."

It is true, the real constitutions or essences of particular things existing, do not depend on the ideas of men, but on the will of the Creator; but their being ranked into sorts, under such and such names, does depend, and wholly depend upon the ideas of men.

Your lordship here ending your four inferences, and all your discourse about nature; you come, in the next place, to treat of person, concerning which your lordship discourseth thus:

" 2. Let us now come to the idea of a person. For " although the common nature in mankind be the " same, yet we see a difference in the several indivi- " duals from one another: so that Peter, and James, " and John, are all of the same kind; yet Peter is not " James, and James is not John. But what is this " distinction founded upon? They may be distinguished " from each other by our senses as to difference of " features,

" features, diſtance of place, &c. but that is not all;
" for ſuppoſing there were no ſuch external difference,
" yet there is a difference between them, as ſeveral in" dividuals of the ſame nature. And here lies the true
" common idea of a perſon, which ariſes from that " manner of ſubſtance which is in one individual, and " is not communicable to another. An individual,
" intelligent ſubſtance, is rather ſuppoſed to the mak" ing of a perſon, than the proper definition of it:
" for a perſon relates to ſomething, which doth diſtin-" guiſh it from another intelligent ſubſtance in the " ſame nature; and therefore the foundation of it lies " in the peculiar manner of ſubſiſtence, which agrees " to one, and to none elſe of the kind: and this is it
" which is called perſonality."

But then your lordſhip aſks, " but how do our ſimple " ideas help us out in this matter? Can we learn from " them the difference of nature and perſon?"

If nature and perſon are taken for two real beings, that do or can exiſt any where, without any relation to theſe two names, I muſt confeſs I do not ſee how ſimple ideas, or any thing elſe, can help us out in this matter; nor can we from ſimple ideas, or any thing elſe that I know, learn the difference between them, nor what they are.

The reaſon why I ſpeak thus, is becauſe your lord-ſhip, in your fore-cited words, ſays, " here lies the " true idea of a perſon;" and in the foregoing diſ-courſe ſpeaks of nature, as if it were ſome ſteady, eſta-bliſhed being, to which one certain preciſe idea neceſ-ſarily belongs to make it a true idea: whereas, my lord, in the way of ideas, I begin at the other end, and think that the word perſon in itſelf ſignifies nothing; and ſo no idea belonging to it, nothing can be ſaid to be the true idea of it. But as ſoon as the common uſe of any language has appropriated it to any idea, then that is the true idea of a perſon, and ſo of nature: but be-cauſe the propriety of language, i. e. the preciſe idea that every word ſtands for, is not always exactly known, but is often diſputed, there is no other way for him that uſes a word that is in diſpute, but to define what he

he signifies by it; and then the dispute can be no longer verbal, but must necessarily be about the idea which he tells us he puts it for.

Taking therefore nature and person for the signs of two ideas they are put to stand for, there is nothing, I think, that helps us so soon, nor so well to find the difference of nature and person, as simple ideas; for by enumerating all the simple ideas, that are contained in the complex idea that each of them is made to stand for, we shall immediately see the whole difference that is between them.

Far be it from me to say there is no other way but this: your lordship proposing to clear the distinction between nature and person, and having declared, "we "can have no clear and distinct idea of it by sensation "or reflection, and that the grounds of identity and "distinction come not into our minds by the simple "ideas of sensation and reflection;" gave me some hopes of getting farther insight into these matters, so as to have more clear and distinct apprehensions concerning nature and person, than was to be had by ideas. But after having, with attention, more than once read over what your lordship, with so much application, has writ thereupon; I must, with regret, confess, that the way is too delicate, and the matter too abstruse, for my capacity; and that I learned nothing out of your lordship's elaborate discourse, but this, that I must content myself with the condemned way of ideas, and despair of ever attaining any knowledge by any other than that, or farther than that will lead me to it.

The remaining part of the chapter containing no remarks of your lordship upon any part of my book, I am glad I have no occasion to give your lordship any farther trouble, but only to beg your lordship's pardon for this, and to assure your lordship that I am,

My Lord,

Your lordship's most humble and most obedient servant,

JOHN LOCKE.

POSTSCRIPT.

My Lord,

UPON a review of theſe papers, I can hardly forbear wondering at myſelf what I have been doing in them; ſince I can ſcarce find upon what ground this controverſy with me ſtands, or whence it roſe, or whither it tends. And I ſhould certainly repent my pains in it, but that I conclude that your lordſhip, who does not throw away your time upon ſlight matters, and things of ſmall moment, having a quicker ſight and larger views than I have, would not have troubled yourſelf ſo much with my book, as to beſtow on it ſeven and twenty pages together of a very learned treatiſe, and that on a very weighty ſubject; and in thoſe twenty-ſeven pages, bring ſeven and twenty quotations out of my book; unleſs there were ſomething in it wherein it is very material that the world ſhould be ſet right; which is what I earneſtly deſire ſhould be done: and, to that purpoſe alone, have taken the liberty to trouble your lordſhip with this letter.

If I have any where omitted any thing of moment in your lordſhip's diſcourſe concerning my notions, or any where miſtaken your lordſhip's ſenſe in what I have taken notice of, I beg your lordſhip's pardon; with this aſſurance, that it was not wilfully done. And if any where, in the warm purſuit of an argument, overattention to the matter ſhould have made me let ſlip any form of expreſſion, in the leaſt circumſtance not carrying with it the utmoſt marks of that reſpect that I acknowledge due, and ſhall always pay to your lordſhip's perſon and known great learning, I diſown it; and deſire your lordſhip to look on it as not coming from my intention, but inadvertency.

No-

No-body's notions, I think, are the better or truer, for ill manners joined with them; and I conclude your lordship, who so well knows the different cast of men's heads, and of the opinions that possess them, will not think it ill manners in any one, if his notions differ from your lordship's, that he owns that difference, and explains the grounds of it as well as he can. I have always thought, that truth and knowledge, by the ill and over-eager management of controversies, lose a great deal of the advantages they might receive, from the variety of conceptions there is in men's understandings. Could the heats, and passion, and ill language be left out of them, they would afford great improvements to those who could separate them from bye-interests and personal prejudices. These I look upon your lordship to be altogether above.

It is not for me, who have so mean a talent in it myself, to prescribe to any one how he should write; for when I have said all I can, he, it is like, will follow his own method, and perhaps cannot help it. Much less would it be good manners in me, to offer any thing that way to a person of your lordship's high rank, above me, in parts and learning, as well as place and dignity. But yet your lordship will excuse it to my shortsightedness, if I wish sometimes that your lordship would have been pleased, in this debate, to have kept every one's part separate to himself; that what I am concerned in, might not have been so mingled with the opinions of others, which are no tenets of mine, nor, as I think, does what I have written any way relate to; but that I and every one might have seen whom your lordship's arguments bore upon, and what interest he had in the controversy, and how far. At least, my lord, give me leave to wish, that your lordship had shown what connexion any thing I have said about ideas, and particularly about the idea of substance, about the possibility that God, if he pleased, might endue some systems of matter with a power of thinking; or what I have said to prove a God, &c. has with any objections, that are made by others, against the doctrine of the Trinity, or against mysteries: for many passages concerning ideas, ſubſtances, the poſſibility of God's beſtowing thoughts on ſome ſyſtems of matter, and the proof of a God, &c. your lordſhip has quoted out of my book, in a chapter wherein your lordſhip profeſſes to anſwer "objections againſt the Trinity, in point of reaſon." Had I been able to diſcover in theſe paſſages of my book, quoted by your lordſhip, what tendency your lordſhip had obſerved in them to any ſuch objections, I ſhould perhaps have troubled your lordſhip with leſs impertinent anſwers. But the uncertainty I was very often in, to what purpoſe your lordſhip brought them, may have made my explications of myſelf leſs appoſite, than what your lordſhip might have expected. If your lordſhip had ſhowed me any thing in my book, that contained or implied any oppoſition in it to any thing revealed in holy writ concerning the Trinity, or any other doctrine contained in the bible, I ſhould have been thereby obliged to your lordſhip for freeing me from that miſtake, and for affording me an opportunity to own to the world that obligation, by publickly retracting my errour. For I know not any thing more diſingenuous, than not publickly to own a conviction one has received concerning any thing erroneous in what one has printed; nor can there, I think, be a greater offence againſt mankind, than to propagate a falſhood whereof one is convinced, eſpecially in a matter wherein men are highly concerned not to be miſled.

The holy ſcripture is to me, and always will be, the conſtant guide of my aſſent; and I ſhall always hearken to it, as containing infallible truth, relating to things of the higheſt concernment. And I wiſh I could ſay, there were no myſteries in it: I acknowledge there are to me, and I fear always will be. But where I want the evidence of things, there yet is ground enough for me to believe, becauſe God has ſaid it: and I ſhall preſently condemn and quit any opinion of mine, as ſoon as I am ſhown that it is contrary to any revelation in the holy ſcripture. But I muſt confeſs to your lordſhip, that I do not perceive any ſuch contrariety in any thing in my Eſſay of Human Underſtanding.

Oates, Jan. 7, 1696-7.

MR. LOCKE'S REPLY

TO THE RIGHT REVEREND THE

LORD BISHOP OF WORCESTER'S ANSWER

TO HIS

LETTER,

Concerning ſome Paſſages relating to

MR. LOCKE'S ESSAY OF HUMAN UNDERSTANDING;

IN A

LATE DISCOURSE OF HIS LORDSHIP'S, IN VINDICATION OF THE TRINITY.

Mr. LOCKE'S REPLY

TO THE

BISHOP OF WORCESTER'S ANSWER.

MY LORD,

YOUR lordſhip having done my letter the honour to think it worth your reply, I think myſelf bound in good manners publicly to acknowledge the favour, and to give your lordſhip an account of the effect it has had upon me, and the grounds upon which I yet differ from you in thoſe points, wherein I am ſtill under the mortification of not being able to bring my ſentiments wholly to agree with your lordſhip's. And this I the more readily do, becauſe it ſeems to me, that that wherein the great difference now lies between us, is founded only on your fears; which, I conclude, upon a ſedate review, your lordſhip will either part with, or elſe give me other reaſons, beſides your apprehenſions, to convince me of miſtakes in my book, which your lordſhip thinks may be of conſequence even in matters of religion.

Your lordſhip makes my letter to conſiſt of two parts; my complaint to your lordſhip, and my vindication of myſelf. You begin with my complaint; one part whereof was, that I was brought into a controverſy, wherein I had never meddled, nor knew how I came to be concerned in. To this your lordſhip is pleaſed to promiſe me ſatisfaction.

Since your lordſhip has condeſcended ſo far, as to be at the pains to give me and others ſatisfaction in this matter, I crave leave to ſecond your deſign herein, and to premiſe a remark or two for the clearer underſtanding the nature of my complaint, which is the only way to ſatisfaction in it.

1. Then it is to be obſerved, that the propoſition which you diſpute againſt, as oppoſite to the doctrine of the Trinity, is this, that clear and diſtinct ideas are neceſſary to certainty. This is evident not only from what your lordſhip ſubjoins to the account of reaſon, given by the author of Chriſtianity not myſterious; but alſo by what your lordſhip ſays here again, in your anſwer to me, in theſe words: " to lay all foundation " of certainty, as to matters of faith, upon clear and " diſtinct ideas, was the opinion I oppoſed."

2. It is to be obſerved, that this you call a new way of reaſoning; and thoſe that build upon it, gentlemen of this new way of reaſoning.

3. It is to be obſerved, that a great part of my complaint was, that I was made one the gentlemen of this new way of reaſoning, without any reaſon at all.

To this complaint of mine, your lordſhip has had the goodneſs to make this anſwer:

" Now to give you, and others, ſatisfaction as to this " matter, I ſhall firſt give an account of the occaſion of " it; and then ſhow what care I took to prevent miſ- " underſtanding about it."

The firſt part of the ſatisfaction your lordſhip is pleaſed to offer, is contained in theſe words:

" The occaſion was this: being to anſwer the ob- " jections in point of reaſon, (which had not been an- " ſwered before) the firſt I mentioned was: That it " was above reaſon, and therefore not to be believed. " In anſwer to this, I propoſed two things to be conſi- " dered: 1. What we underſtand by reaſon. 2. What " ground in reaſon there is to reject any doctrine above " it, when it is propoſed as a matter of faith."

" As to the former I obſerved, that the unitarians, " in their late pamphlets, talked very much about clear " and diſtinct ideas and perceptions, and that the myſ- " teries of faith were repugnant to them; but never " went about to ſtate the nature and bounds of reaſon, " in ſuch a manner as they ought to have done, who " make it the rule and ſtandard of what they are to be- " lieve. But I added, that a late author, in a book

" called

" called Christianity not mysterious, had taken upon " him to clear this matter, whom for that cause I was " bound to consider: the design of this discourse related " wholly to matters of faith, and not to philosophical " speculations; so that there can be no dispute about " his application of these he calls principles of reason " and certainty.

" When the mind makes use of intermediate ideas, " to discover the agreement or disagreement of the " ideas received into them; this method of knowledge, " he saith, is properly called reason or demonstration.

" The mind, as he goes on, receives ideas two ways.

" 1. By intromission of the senses.

" 2. By considering its own operations.

" And these simple and distinct ideas are the sole " matter and foundation of all our reasoning."

And so all our certainty is resolved into two things, either " immediate perception, which is self-evidence; " or the use of intermediate ideas, which discover the " certainty of any thing dubious: which is what he " calls reason.

" Now this, I said, did suppose, that we must have " clear and distinct ideas of whatever we pretend to any " certainty of in our minds (by reason) and that the " only way to attain this certainty, is by comparing " these ideas together; which excludes all certainty of " faith or reason, where we cannot have such clear and " distinct ideas.

" From hence I proceeded to show, that we could not " have such clear and distinct ideas as were necessary in " the present debate, either by sensation or reflection, " and consequently we could not attain to any certainty " about it; for which I instanced in the nature of sub- " stance and person, and the distinction between them.

" And by virtue of these principles, I said, that I did " not wonder that the gentlemen of this new way of " reasoning had almost discarded substance out of the " reasonable part of the world."

This is all your lordship says here, to give me, and others, satisfaction, as to the matters of my complaint. For what follows of your answer, is nothing but your lord-lordſhip's arguing againſt what I have ſaid concerning ſubſtance.

In theſe words therefore, above quoted, I am to find the ſatisfaction your lordſhip has promiſed, as to the occaſion why your lordſhip made me one of the gentlemen of the new way of reaſoning, and in that joined me with the unitarians, and the author of Chriſtianity not myſterious. But I crave leave to repreſent to your lordſhip, wherein the words above-quoted come ſhort of giving me ſatisfaction.

In the firſt place, it is plain they were intended for a ſhort narrative of what was contained in the tenth chapter of your Vindication of the Doctrine of the Trinity, relating to this matter. But how could your lordſhip think, that the repeating the ſame things over again could give me or any body elſe ſatisfaction, as to my being made one of the gentlemen of this new way of reaſoning?

Indeed I cannot ſay it is an exact repetition of what is to be found in the beginning of that tenth chapter; becauſe your lordſhip ſaid, in that tenth chapter, that "the author of chriſtianity not myſterious gives an "account of reaſon, which ſuppoſes that we muſt have "clear and diſtinct ideas of whatever we pretend to a "certainty of in our minds." But here, in the paſſage above ſet down, out of your anſwer to my letter, I find it is not to his account of reaſon, but to ſomething taken out of that, and ſomething borrowed by him out of my book, to which your lordſhip annexes this ſuppoſition. For your lordſhip ſays "now this, I ſaid, "did ſuppoſe that we muſt have clear and diſtinct ideas "of whatever we pretend to any certainty of in our "minds (by reaſon.)"

If your lordſhip did ſay ſo in your Vindication of the doctrine of the Trinity, your printer did your lordſhip two manifeſt injuries. The one is, that he omitted theſe words [by reaſon]: and the other, that he annexed your lordſhip's words to the account of reaſon, there given by the author of chriſtianity not myſterious; and not to thoſe words your lordſhip here ſays you annexed them to. For this here refers to other words, and not barely to that author's account of reason; as any one may satisfy himself, who will but compare these two places together.

One thing more seems to me very remarkable in this matter, and that is, that "the laying all foundation of certainty, as to matters of faith, upon "clear and distinct ideas, should be the opinion which "you oppose," as your lordship declares; and that this should be it for which the unitarian, the author of Christianity not mysterious, and I, are jointly brought on the stage, under the title of the gentlemen of this new way of reasoning: and yet no one quotation be brought out of the unitarians, to show it to be their opinion; nor any thing alleged out of the author of Christianity not mysterious, to show it to be his; but only some things quoted out of him, which are said to suppose all foundation of certainty to be laid upon clear and distinct ideas: which that they do suppose it, is not, I think, self-evident, nor yet proved. But this I am sure, as to myself, I do no where lay all foundation of certainty in clear and distinct ideas; and therefore am still at a loss, why I was made one of the gentlemen of this new way of reasoning.

Another thing wherein your lordship's narrative, intended for my satisfaction, comes short of giving it me, is this; that at most it gives but an account of the occasion why the unitarians, and the author of Christianity not mysterious, were made by your lordship the gentlemen of this new way of reasoning. But it pretends not to say a word why I was made one of them; which was the thing wherein I needed satisfaction. For your lordship breaks off your report of the matter of fact, just when you were come to the matter of my complaint; which you pass over in silence, and turn your discourse to what I have said in my letter: for your lordship ends the account of the occasion, in these words: "the gentlemen of this new way of reason-"ing had almost discarded substance out of the rea-"sonable part of the world." And there your lordship stops. Whereas it is in the words that immediately follow, that I am brought in as one of thoſe gentlemen, of which I would have been glad to have known the occaſion; and it is in this that I needed ſatisfaction. For that which concerns the others, I meddle not with; I only deſire to know upon what occaſion, or why, I was brought into this diſpute of the Trinity. But of that, in this account of the occaſion, I do not ſee that your lordſhip ſays any thing.

I have been forced therefore to look again a little cloſer into this whole matter: and, upon a freſh examination of what your lordſhip has ſaid, in your Vindication of the doctrine of the Trinity, and in your anſwer to my letter, I come now to ſee a little clearer, that the matter, in ſhort, ſtands thus: The author of Chriſtianity not myſterious was one of the gentlemen of this new way of reaſoning, becauſe he had laid down a doctrine concerning reaſon, which ſuppoſed clear and diſtinct ideas neceſſary to certainty. But that doctrine of his tied me not at all to him, as may be ſeen by comparing his account of reaſon with what I have ſaid of reaſon in my eſſay, which your lordſhip accuſes of no ſuch ſuppoſition; and ſo I ſtood clear from his account of reaſon, or any thing it ſuppoſes. But he having given an account of the original of our ideas, and having ſaid ſomething about them conformable to what is in my eſſay, that has tied him and me ſo cloſe together, that by this ſort of connexion I came to be one of the gentlemen of this new way of reaſoning, which conſiſts in making clear and diſtinct ideas neceſſary to certainty; though I no where ſay, or ſuppoſe, clear and diſtinct ideas neceſſary to certainty.

How your lordſhip came to join me with the author of Chriſtianity not myſterious, I think is now evident. And he being the link whereby your lordſhip joins me to the unitarians, in Objections againſt the Trinity in point of Reaſon anſwered; give me leave, my lord, a little to examine the connexion of this link on that ſide alſo, i. e. what has made your lordſhip join him and the unitarians in this point, viz. making clear and diſtinct ideas neceſſary to certainty; that great battery, it ſeems, ſeems, which they make uſe of againſt the doctrine of the Trinity in point of reaſon.

Now as to this, your lordſhip ſays, "that the uni-"tarians having not explained the nature and bounds "of reaſon, as they ought; the author of Chriſtianity "not myſterious hath endeavoured to make amends for "this, and takes upon him to make this matter clear." And then your lordſhip ſets down his account of reaſon at large.

I will not examine how it appears, that the author of Chriſtianity not myſterious gave this account of reaſon, to ſupply the defect of the unitarians herein, or to make amends for their not having done it. Your lordſhip does not quote any thing out of him, to ſhow that it was to make amends for what the unitarians had neglected. I only look to ſee how the unitarians and he come to be united, in this dangerous principle of the neceſſity of clear and diſtinct ideas to certainty: which is that which makes him a gentleman of this new and dangerous way of reaſoning; and conſequently me too, becauſe he agrees in ſome particulars with my eſſay.

Now, my lord, having looked over his account of reaſon, as ſet down by your lordſhip; give me leave to ſay, that he that ſhall compare that account of reaſon with your lordſhip's animadverſion annexed to it, in theſe words, "this is offered to the world as an ac-"count of reaſon; but to ſhow how very looſe and "unſatisfactory it is, I deſire it may be conſidered, "that this doctrine ſuppoſes that we muſt have clear "and diſtinct ideas of whatever we pretend to any "certainty of in our minds; and that the only way to "attain this certainty, is by comparing theſe ideas to-"gether; which excludes all certainty of faith or rea-"ſon, where we cannot have ſuch clear and diſtinct "ideas:" will, I fear, hardly defend himſelf from wondering at the way your lordſhip has taken to ſhow, how looſe and unſatisfactory an account of reaſon his is; but by imagining that your lordſhip had a great mind to ſay ſomething againſt clear and diſtinct ideas, as neceſſary to certainty; or that your lordſhip had ſome reaſon for bringing them in, that does not appear in that account of reaſon; ſince in it, from one end to the other, there is not the leaſt mention of clear and diſtinct ideas. Nor does he (that I ſee) ſay any thing that ſuppoſes that we muſt have clear and diſtinct ideas of whatever we pretend to any certainty of in our minds.

of

But whether he and the unitarians do, or do not, lay all foundation of certainty, as to matters of faith, upon clear and diſtinct ideas, I concern not myſelf: all my inquiry is, how he and I and the unitarians come to be joined together, as gentlemen of this new way of reaſoning? Which, in ſhort, as far as I can trace and obſerve the connexion, is only thus:

The unitarians are the men of this new way of reaſoning, becauſe they ſpeak of clear and diſtinct perceptions, in their anſwer to your lordſhip's ſermon, as your lordſhip ſays. The author of Chriſtianity not myſterious is joined to the unitarians, as a gentleman of this new way of reaſoning, becauſe his doctrine, concerning reaſon, ſuppoſes we muſt have clear and diſtinct ideas of whatever we pretend to any certainty of in our minds: and I am joined to that author, becauſe he ſays, "that the uſing of intermediate ideas "to diſcover the agreement or diſagreement of the "ideas received into our minds, is reaſon; and that the "mind receives ideas by the intromiſſion of the ſenſes, "and by conſidering its own operations. And theſe "ſimple and diſtinct ideas are the ſole matter and foun-"dation of all our reaſoning." This, becauſe it ſeems to be borrowed out of my book, is that which unites me to him, and by him conſequently to the unitarians.

And thus I am come to the end of the thread of your lordſhip's diſcourſe, whereby I am brought into the company of the gentlemen of this new way of reaſoning, and thereby bound up in the bundle and cauſe of the unitarians arguing againſt the doctrine of the Trinity, by objections in point of reaſon.

I have been longer upon this, than I thought I ſhould be; but the thread that ties me to the unitarians being ſpun very fine and ſubtile, is, as it naturally falls out, the longer for it, and the harder to be followed, ſo as to diſcover the connexion every where. As for example; the

the thread that ties me to the author of Christianity not mysterious, is so fine and delicate, that without laying my eyes close to it, and poring a good while, I can hardly perceive how it hangs together; that because he says what your lordship charges him to say, in your Vindication, &c. and because I say what your lordship quotes out of my Essay, that therefore I am one of the gentlemen of this new way of reasoning, which your lordship opposes in the unitarians, as dangerous to the doctrine of the Trinity. This connexion of me with the author of Christianity not mysterious; and by him, with the unitarians; (being in a point wherein I agree with your lordship, and not with them, if they do lay all the foundation of knowledge in clear and distinct ideas) is, I say, pretty hard for me clearly to perceive now, though your lordship has given me, in your letter, that end of the clue which was to lead me to it, for my satisfaction; but was impossible for me, or (as I think) any body else to discover, while it stood as it does in your lordship's Vindication, &c.

And now, my lord, it is time I ask your lordship's pardon, for saying in my first letter, "that I hoped I "might say, you had gone a little out of your way to "do me a kindness;" which your lordship, by so often repeating of it, seems to be displeased with. For, besides that there is nothing out of the way to a willing mind, I have now the satisfaction to be joined to the author of Christianity not mysterious, for his agreeing with me in the original of our ideas and the materials of our knowledge (though I agree not with him, or any body else, in laying all foundation of certainty in matters of faith, in clear and distinct ideas;) and his being joined with the unitarians, by giving an account of reason, which supposes clear and distinct ideas, as necessary to all knowledge and certainty: I have now, I say, the satisfaction to see how I lay directly in your lordship's way, in opposing these gentlemen, who lay all foundation of certainty, as to matters of faith, upon clear and distinct ideas; i. e. the unitarians, the gentlemen of this new way of reasoning; so dangerous to the doctrine of the Trinity. For the author of Christianity tianity not myſterious agreeing with them in ſome things, and with me in others; he being joined to them on one ſide by an account of reaſon, that ſuppoſes clear and diſtinct ideas neceſſary to certainty; and to me on the other ſide, by ſaying, "the mind has its ideas from "ſenſation and reflection, and that thoſe are the mate-"rials and foundations of all our knowledge, &c." who can deny, but ſo ranged in a row, your lordſhip may place yourſelf ſo, that we may ſeem but one object, and ſo one ſhot be aimed at us altogether? Though, if your lordſhip would be at the pains to change your ſtation a little, and view us on the other ſide, we ſhould viſibly appear to be very far aſunder; and I, in particular, be found, in the matter controverted, to be nearer to your lordſhip, than to either of them, or any body elſe, who lay all foundation of certainty, as to matters of faith, upon clear and diſtinct ideas. For I perfectly aſſent to what your lordſhip ſaith, "that there are many things of which we may "be certain, and yet can have no clear and diſtinct "ideas of them."

Beſides this account of the occaſion of bringing me into your lordſhip's chapter, wherein objections againſt the Trinity in point of reaſon are anſwered, which we have conſidered; your lordſhip promiſes "to ſhow "what care you took to prevent being miſunderſtood "about it, to give me and others ſatisfaction, as to "this matter:" which I find about the end of the firſt quarter of your lordſhip's anſwer to me. All the pages between, being taken up in a diſpute againſt what I have ſaid about ſubſtance, and our idea of it, that I think has now no more to do with the queſtion, whether I ought to have been made one of the gentlemen of this new way of reaſoning, or with my complaint about it; though there be many things in it that I ought to conſider apart, to ſhow the reaſon why I am not yet brought to your lordſhip's ſentiments, by what you have there ſaid. To return therefore to the buſineſs in hand.

Your lordſhip ſays, "I come therefore now to ſhow "the care I took to prevent being miſunderſtood; "which

" which will beſt appear by my own words, viz. I " muſt do that right to the ingenious author of the " Eſſay of Human Underſtanding (from whence theſe " notions are borrowed, to ſerve other purpoſes than " he intended them) that he makes the caſes of ſpiri- " tual and corporeal ſubſtances to be alike."

Theſe words, my lord, which you have quoted out of your Vindication, &c. I, with acknowledgment, own, will keep your lordſhip from being miſunderſtood, if any one ſhould be in danger to be ſo fooliſhly miſtaken, as to think your lordſhip could not treat me with great civility when you pleaſed; or that you did not here make me a great compliment, in the epithet which you here beſtow upon me. Theſe words alſo of your lordſhip, will certainly prevent your lordſhip's being miſunderſtood, in allowing me to have made the caſe of ſpiritual and corporeal ſubſtances to be alike. But this was not what I complained of: my complaint was, that I was brought into a controverſy, wherein what I had written had nothing more to do, than in any other controverſy whatſoever; and that I was made a party on one ſide of a queſtion, though what I ſaid in my book made me not more on the one ſide of that queſtion, than the other. And that your lordſhip had ſo mixed me, in many places, with thoſe gentlemen, whoſe objections againſt the Trinity in point of reaſon your lordſhip was anſwering, that the reader could not but take me to be one of them that had objected againſt the Trinity in point of reaſon. As for example; where your lordſhip firſt introduces me, your lordſhip ſays, " That the gentlemen of this new way of reaſoning " have almoſt diſcarded ſubſtance out of the reaſon- " able part of the world. For they not only tell us, " that we can have no idea of it by ſenſation and " reflection; but that nothing is ſignified by it, only " an uncertain ſuppoſition of we know not what." And for theſe words, B. i. ch. 4. § 18. of my Eſſay is quoted.

Now, my lord, what care is there taken? what proviſion is there made, in the words above alleged by your lordſhip, to prevent your being miſunderſtood, if you meant not that I was one of the gentlemen of this new way of reaſoning? And if you did mean that I was, your lordſhip did me a manifeſt injury. For I no-where make clear and diſtinct ideas neceſſary to certainty; which is the new way of reaſoning which your lordſhip oppoſes in the unitarians, as contrary to the doctrine of the Trinity. Your lordſhip ſays, you took care not to be miſunderſtood. And the words wherein you took that care, are theſe: "I muſt do that right "to the ingenious author of the Eſſay of Human Un- "derſtanding, (from whence theſe notions are bor- "rowed, to ſerve other purpoſes than he intended "them) that he makes the caſe of ſpiritual and cor- "poreal ſubſtances to be alike." But which of theſe words are they, my lord, I beſeech you, which are to hinder people from taking me to be one of the gentlemen of that new way of reaſoning, wherewith they over-turn the doctrine of the Trinity? I confeſs, my lord, I cannot ſee any of them that do: and that I did not ſee any of them that could hinder men from that miſtake, I ſhowed your lordſhip, in my firſt letter to your lordſhip, where I take notice of that paſſage in your lordſhip's book. My words are: "I return my "acknowledgement to your lordſhip, for the good opi- "nion you are here pleaſed to expreſs of the author of "the Eſſay of Human Underſtanding; and that you "do not impute to him the ill uſe ſome may have "made of his notions. But he craves leave to ſay, "that he ſhould have been better preſerved from the "hard and ſiniſter thoughts which ſome men are always "ready for; if, in what you have here publiſhed, your "lordſhip had been pleaſed to have ſhown where you "directed your diſcourſe againſt him, and where "againſt others. Nothing but my words and my book "being quoted, the world will be apt to think that I "am the perſon who argue againſt the Trinity and "deny myſteries, againſt whom your lordſhip directs "thoſe pages. And indeed, my lord, though I have "read them over with great attention, yet, in many "places, I cannot diſcern whether it be againſt me, or "any-body elſe, that your lordſhip is arguing. That

"which

" which often makes the difficulty, is, that I do not see " how what I say does at all concern the controversy " your lordship is engaged in, and yet I alone am " quoted." To which complaint of mine your lordship returns no other answer, but refers me to the same passage again for satisfaction; and tells me, that therein you took care not to be misunderstood. Your lordship might see that those words did not satisfy me in that point, when I did myself the honour to write to your lordship; and how your lordship should think the repetition of them in your answer, should satisfy me better, I confess I cannot tell.

I make the like complaint in these words: " This " paragraph, which continues to prove, that we may " have certainty without clear and distinct ideas, I " would flatter myself is not meant against me, because " it opposes nothing that I have said, and so shall not " say any thing to it; but only set it down to do your " lordship right, that the reader may judge. Though " I do not find how he will easily overlook me, and " think I am not at all concerned in it, since my words " alone are quoted in several pages immediately pre- " ceding and following: and in the very next para- " graph it is said, how they come to know; which " word, they, must signify some-body besides the author " of Christianity not mysterious; and then, I think, " by the whole tenour of your lordship's discourse, no- " body will be left but me, possible to be taken to be " the other; for in the same paragraph your lordship " says, the same persons say, that, notwithstanding " their ideas, it is possible for matter to think."

" I know not what other person says so but I; but " if any one does, I am sure no person but I say so in " my book, which your lordship has quoted for them, " viz. Human Understanding, B. iv. ch. 3. This, " which is a riddle to me, the more amazes me, be- " cause I find it in a treatise of your lordship's, who so " perfectly understands the rules and methods of " writing, whether in controversy or any other way: " but this, which seems wholly new to me, I shall " better understand, when your lordship pleases to

" explain

" explain it. In the mean time, I mention it as an " apology for myſelf, if ſometimes I miſtake your " lordſhip's aim, and ſo miſapply my anſwer."

To this alſo your lordſhip anſwers nothing, but for ſatisfaction refers me to the care you took to prevent being miſunderſtood; which, you ſay, appears by thoſe words of yours above-recited. But what there is in thoſe words that can prevent the miſtake I complained I was expoſed to; what there is in them, that can hinder any one from thinking that I am one of the they and them that oppoſe the doctrine of the Trinity, with arguments in point of reaſon; that I muſt confeſs, my lord, I cannot ſee, though I have read them over and over again to find it out.

The like might be ſaid in reſpect of all thoſe other paſſages, where I make the like complaint, which your lordſhip takes notice I was frequent in; nor could I avoid it, being almoſt every leaf perplexed to know whether I was concerned, and how far, in what your lordſhip ſaid, ſince my words were quoted, and others argued againſt. And for ſatisfaction herein, I am ſent to a compliment of your lordſhip's. I ſay not this, my lord, that I do not highly value the civility and good opinion your lordſhip has expreſſed of me therein; but to let your lordſhip ſee, that I was not ſo rude as to complain of want of civility in your lordſhip: but my complaint was of ſomething elſe; and therefore it was ſomething elſe wherein I wanted ſatisfaction.

Indeed your lordſhip ſays, in that paſſage; " from " the author of the Eſſay of Human Underſtanding, " theſe notions are borrowed, to ſerve other purpoſes " than he intended them." But, my lord, how this helps in the caſe to prevent my being miſtaken to be one of thoſe whom your lordſhip had to do with in this chapter, in anſwering objections in point of reaſon againſt the Trinity, I muſt own, I do not yet perceive: for theſe notions, which your lordſhip is there arguing againſt, are all taken out of my book, and made uſe of by no-body that I know, but your lordſhip, or myſelf: and which of us two it is, that hath borrowed them to ſerve other purpoſes than I intended them, I muſt leave to your lordship to determine. I, and I think every body else with me, will be at a loss to know who they are, till their words, and not mine, are produced to prove, that they do use those notions of mine, which your lordship there calls these notions, to purposes to which I intended them not.

to

But to those words in your lordship's Vindication of the doctrine of the Trinity you, in your answer to my letter, for farther satisfaction, add as followeth: "it "was too plain that the bold writer against the myste- "ries of our faith took his notions and expressions from "thence: and what could be said more for your vindi- "cation, than that he turned them into other pur- "poses than the author intended them?"

With submission my lord, it is as plain as print can make it, that whatever notions and expressions that writer took from my book; those in question, which your lordship there calls these notions, my book is only quoted for; nor does it appear, that your lordship knew that that writer had any where made use of them: or, if your lordship knew them to be any where in his writings, the matter of astonishment and complaint is still the greater, that your lordship should know where they were in his writings used to serve other purposes than I intended them; and yet your lordship should quote only my book, where they were used to serve only those purposes I intended them.

How much this is for my vindication, we shall presently see: but what it can do to give satisfaction to me or others, as to the matters of my complaint, for which it is brought by your lordship, that I confess I do not see. For my complaint was not against those gentlemen, that they had cast any aspersions upon my book, against which I desired your lordship to vindicate me; but my complaint was of your lordship, that you had brought me into a controversy, and so joined me with those against whom you were disputing in defence of the Trinity, that those who read your lordship's book, would be apt to mistake me for one of them.

But your lordship asks, "what could be said more "for my vindication?" My lord, I shall always take it for a very great honour, to be vindicated by your lordſhip againſt others. But in the preſent caſe, I wanted no vindication againſt others: if my book or notions had need of any vindication, it was only againſt your lordſhip; for it was your lordſhip, and not others, who had in your book diſputed againſt paſſages quoted out of mine, for ſeveral pages together.

Nevertheleſs, my lord, I gratefully acknowledge the favour you have done for me, for being guarantee for my intentions, which you have no reaſon to repent of. For as it was not in my intention to write any thing againſt truth, much leſs againſt any of the ſacred truths contained in the ſcriptures; ſo I will be anſwerable for it, that there is nothing in my book, which can be made uſe of to other purpoſes, but what may be turned upon them, who ſo uſe it, to ſhow their miſtake and errour. No-body can hinder but that ſyllogiſm, which was intended for the ſervice of truth, will ſometimes be made uſe of againſt it. But it is nevertheleſs of truth's ſide, and always turns upon the adverſaries of it.

Your lordſhip adds, "and the true reaſon why the "plural number was ſo often uſed by me, was, be- "cauſe he [i. e. the author of Chriſtianity not myſte- "rious] built upon thoſe, which he imagined had been "your grounds."

Whether it was your lordſhip, or he, that imagined thoſe to be my grounds, which were not my grounds, I will not pretend to ſay. Be that as it will; it is plain from what your lordſhip here ſays, that all the foundation of your lordſhip's ſo poſitively, and in ſo many places, making me one of the gentlemen of the new way of reaſoning, was but an imagination of an imagination. Your lordſhip ſays, "he built upon thoſe, "which he imagined had been my grounds;" but it is but an imagination in your lordſhip, that he did ſo imagine; and with all due reſpect, give me leave to ſay, a very ill-grounded imagination too. For it appears to me no foundation to think, that becauſe he or any body agrees with me in things that are in my book, and ſo appears to be of my opinion; therefore he imagines he agrees with me in other things, which are not in in my book, and are not my opinion. As in the matter before us; what reaſon is there to imagine, that the author of Chriſtianity not myſterious imagined, that he built on my grounds, in laying all foundation of certainty in clear and diſtinct ideas, (if he does ſo) which is no-where laid down in my book; becauſe he builds on my grounds, concerning the original of our ideas, or any thing elſe he finds in my book, or quotes out of it? For this is all that the author of Chriſtianity not myſterious has done in this caſe, or can be brought to ſupport ſuch an imagination.

But ſuppoſing it true, that he imagined he built upon my grounds; what reaſon, I beſeech your lordſhip, is that for uſing the plural number, in quoting words which I alone ſpoke, and he no-where makes uſe of? To this your lordſhip ſays, " that he imagined he " built upon my grounds; and your lordſhip's buſineſs " was to ſhow thoſe expreſſions of mine, which ſeemed " moſt to countenance his method of proceeding, could " not give any reaſonable ſatisfaction:" which, as I humbly conceive, amounts to thus much: the author of Chriſtianity not myſterious, writes ſomething which your lordſhip diſapproves: your lordſhip imagines he builds upon my grounds; and then your lordſhip picks out ſome expreſſions of mine, which you imagine do moſt countenance his method of proceeding, and quote them, as belonging in common to us both; though it be certain he no-where uſed them. And this your lordſhip tells me (to give me ſatisfaction, what care you took not to be miſunderſtood) was the true reaſon, why you ſo often uſed the plural number: which with ſubmiſſion, my lord, ſeems to me to be no reaſon at all: unleſs it can be a reaſon to aſcribe my words to another man, and me together, which he never ſaid; becauſe your lordſhip imagines he might, if he would, have ſaid them. And ought not this, my lord, to ſatisfy me of the care you took, not to be miſunderſtood?

Your lordſhip goes on to ſhow your care to prevent your being miſunderſtood: your words are, " but you " [i. e. the author of the letter to your lordſhip] ſay, " you do not place certainty only in clear and diſtinct

" ideas, but in the clear and viſible connexion of any " of our ideas. And certainty of knowledge, you tell " us, is to perceive the agreement or diſagreement of " ideas, as expreſſed in any propoſition. Whether " this be a true account of the certainty of knowledge, " or not, will be preſently conſidered. But it is very " poſſible he might miſtake, or miſapply your notions; " but there is too much reaſon to believe he thought " them the ſame: and we have no reaſon to be ſorry, " that he hath given you this occaſion for explaining " your meaning, and for the vindication of yourſelf, " in the matters you apprehend I had charged you " with."

Your lordſhip herein ſays, it is very poſſible the author of Chriſtianity not myſterious might miſtake, or miſapply my notions. I find it indeed very poſſible, that my notions may be miſtaken and miſapplied; if by miſapplied, be meant drawing inferences from thence, which belong not to them. But if that poſſibility be reaſon enough to join me in the plural number with the author of Chriſtianity not myſterious, or with the unitarians; it is as much a reaſon to join me in the plural number with the papiſts, when your lordſhip has an occaſion to write againſt them next; or with the lutherans, or quakers, &c. for it is poſſible, that any of theſe may miſtake, or in that ſenſe miſapply my notions. But if miſtaking, or miſapplying my notions, actually join me to any body, I know no-body that I am ſo ſtrictly joined to, as your lordſhip: for, as I humbly conceive, no-body has ſo much miſtaken and miſapplied my notions, as your lordſhip. I ſhould not take the liberty to ſay this, were not my thinking ſo, the very reaſon and excuſe for my troubling your lordſhip with this ſecond letter. For, my lord, I do not ſo well love controverſy, eſpecially with ſo great and ſo learned a man as your lordſhip, as to ſay a word more; had I not hopes to ſhow, for my excuſe, that it is my misfortune to have my notions to be miſtaken or miſapplied by your lordſhip.

Your lordſhip adds " but there is too much reaſon " to believe, that he thought them the ſame;" i. e. that the

the author of Christianity not mysterious thought that I had laid all foundation of certainty in clear and distinct ideas, as well as he did; for that is it, upon which all this dispute is raised. Whether he himself laid all foundation of certainty in clear and distinct ideas, is more than I know. But what that "too "much reason to believe, that he thought" that I did, is, I am sure, is hard for me to guess, till your lordship is pleased to name it. For that there is not any such thing in my book, to give him, or any body else, reason to think so, I suppose your lordship is now satisfied: and I would not willingly suppose the reason to be, that unless he, or somebody else thought so, my book could not be brought into the dispute; though it be not easy to find any other. It follows in your lordship's letter:

"And we have no reason to be sorry, that he hath "given you this occasion for the explaining your mean- "ing, and for the vindication of yourself in the matter "you apprehended I had charged you with."

My lord, I know not any occasion he has given me of vindicating myself: your lordship was pleased to join me with the gentlemen of the new way of reasoning, who laid all foundation of certainty in clear and distinct ideas. All the vindication I make, or need to make in the case, is, that I lay not all foundation of certainty in clear and distinct ideas; and so there was no reason to join me with those that do. And for this vindication of myself, your lordship alone gives me occasion: but whether your lordship has reason to be sorry, or not sorry, your lordship best knows.

Your lordship goes on, in what is designed for my satisfaction, as followeth:

"And if your answer doth not come fully up in all "things to what I could wish; yet I am glad to find "that in general you own the mysteries of the christian "faith, and the scriptures to be the rule and foundation "of it."

Which words, my lord, seem to me rather to show, that your lordship is not willing to be satisfied with my book, than to show any care your lordship took to prevent people's being led by your lordſhip's book into a miſtake, that I was one of the gentlemen of that new way of reaſoning, who argued againſt the doctrine of the Trinity.

The gentlemen of the new way of reaſoning, whom your lordſhip ſets yourſelf to anſwer in that 10th chapter of your Vindication of the doctrine of the Trinity, are thoſe who lay all foundation of certainty in clear and diſtinct ideas; and from that foundation raiſe objections againſt the Trinity, in point of reaſon. Your lordſhip joins me with theſe gentlemen in that chapter, and calls me one of them. Of this I complain; and tell your lordſhip, in the place and words you have quoted out of my letter, "that I do not place "certainty only in clear and diſtinct ideas." I expected upon this, that your lordſhip would have aſſoiled me, and ſaid, that then I was none of them; nor ſhould have been joined with them. But inſtead of that your lordſhip tells me, "my anſwer doth not come fully up "in all things, to what your lordſhip could wiſh." The queſtion is, whether I ought to be liſted with theſe, and ranked on their ſide, who place certainty only in clear and diſtinct ideas? What more direct and categorical anſwer could your lordſhip wiſh for, to decide this queſtion, than that which I give? To which nothing can be replied, but that it is not true: but that your lordſhip does not object to it; but ſays, "it "does not come fully up in all things to what your "lordſhip could wiſh." What other things there can be wiſhed for in an anſwer, which, if it be true, decides the matter, and which is not doubted to be true, comes not within my gueſs. But though my anſwer be an unexceptionable anſwer, as to the point in queſtion, yet, it ſeems, my book is not an unexceptionable book, becauſe, I own, that in it I ſay, "that certainty of "knowledge is to perceive the agreement or diſagree-"ment of any ideas, as expreſſed in any propoſition." Whether it be true, that certainty of knowledge lies in ſuch a perception, is nothing to the queſtion here; that, perhaps, we may have an occaſion to examine in another place. The queſtion here is, whether I ought to have have been ranked with those, who lay all foundation of certainty in clear and distinct ideas? And to that, I think, my answer is a full and decisive answer; and there is nothing wanting in it, which your lordship could wish for, to make it fuller.

But it is natural the book should be found fault with, when the author, it seems, has had the ill luck to be under your lordship's ill opinion. This I could not but be surprized to find in a paragraph, which your lordship declares was designed to give me satisfaction. Your lordship says, "though my answer doth not "come up in all things to what you could wish; yet "you are glad to find, that in general I own the my- "steries of the christian faith, and the scriptures to be "the foundation and rule of it."

My lord, I do not remember that ever I declared to your lordship, or any body else, that I did not own all the doctrines of the christian faith, and the scriptures to be the sole rule and foundation of it. And therefore I know no more reason your lordship had to say, that you are glad to find, that in general I own, &c. than I have reason to say, "that I am glad to find, that "in general your lordship owns the mysteries of the "christian faith, and the scriptures to be the founda- "tion and rule of it." Unless it be taken for granted, that those who do not write and appear in print, in controversies of religion, do not own the christian faith, and the scriptures as the rule of it.

I know, my lord, of what weight a commendation from your lordship's pen is in the world: and I perceive your lordship knows the value of it, which has made your lordship temper yours of me with so large an alloy, for fear possibly lest it should work too strongly on my vanity. For whether I consider where these words stand, or how they are brought in, or what intimation they carry with them; which way soever I turn them, I do not find they were intended to puff me up, though they are in a paragraph purposely written to give me satisfaction; and grounded on words of mine, which seem to be approved by your lordship before any in my letter; but which yet have nothing to do in this place (whither your lordſhip has been at the pains to fetch them from my poſtſcript) unleſs it be to give vent to ſo extraordinary a ſort of compliment: for they are, I think, in their ſubject, as well as place, the remoteſt of any in my letter, from the argument your lordſhip was then upon; which was to ſhow what care you had taken not to be miſunderſtood to my prejudice. For what, I beſeech you, my lord, would you think of him, who from ſome words of your lordſhip's, that ſeemed to expreſs much of a chriſtian ſpirit and temper (for ſo your lordſhip is pleaſed to ſay of theſe of mine) ſhould ſeek occaſion to tell your lordſhip, and the world, that he was glad to find that your lordſhip was a chriſtian, and that you believed the Bible? For this, common humanity, as well as chriſtian charity, obliges us to believe of every one, who calls himſelf a chriſtian, till he manifeſts the contrary. Whereas the ſaying, I am glad to find ſuch an one believes the ſcripture, is underſtood to intimate, that I knew the time when he did not; or, at leaſt, when I ſuſpected he did not. But perhaps your lordſhip had ſome other meaning in it, which I do not ſee. The largeneſs of your lordſhip's mind, and the charity of a father of our church, makes me hope that I paſſed not in your lordſhip's opinion for a heathen, till your lordſhip read that paſſage in the poſtſcript of my late letter to you.

But to return to the ſatisfaction your lordſhip is giving me. To thoſe words quoted out of my poſtſcript, your lordſhip ſubjoins: "which words ſeem to "expreſs ſo much of a chriſtian ſpirit and temper, that "I cannot believe you intended to give any advantage "to the enemies of the chriſtian faith; but whether "there hath not been too juſt occaſion for them to "apply them in that manner, is a thing very fit for "you to conſider."

Your lordſhip here again expreſſes a favourable opinion of my intentions, which I gratefully acknowledge: but you add, "that it is fit for me to conſider, whe-"ther there hath not been too juſt occaſion for them "to apply them in that manner." My lord, I ſhall do what your lordſhip thinks is fit for me to do, when your your lordship does me the favour to tell me, who those enemies of the faith are, who have applied those words of my postscript, (for to those alone, by any kind of construction, can I make your lordship's word, "them," refer) and the manner which they have applied them in, and the too just occasion they have had so to apply them. For I confess, my lord, I am at a loss as to all these; and thereby unable to obey your lordship's commands, till your lordship does me the favour to make me understand all these particulars better.

But if by any new way of construction, unintelligible to me, the word, them, here shall be applied to any passages of my Essay of Human Understanding; I must humbly crave leave to observe this one thing, in the whole course of what your lordship has designed for my satisfaction, that though my complaint be of your lordship's manner of applying what I had published in my Essay, so as to interest me in a controversy wherein I meddled not; your lordship all along tells me of others, that have misapplied I know not what words in my book, after I know not what manner. Now as to this matter, I beseech your lordship to believe, that when any one, in such a manner, applies my words contrary to what I intended them, so as to make them opposite to the doctrine of the Trinity, and me a party in that controversy against the Trinity, as your lordship knows I complain your lordship has done, I shall complain of them too; and consider, as well as I can, what satisfaction they give me and others in it.

Your lordship's next words are: "for in an age, "wherein the mysteries of faith are so much exposed, "by the promoters of scepticism and infidelity; it is a "thing of dangerous consequence to start such new "methods of certainty, as are apt to leave men's "minds more doubtful than before; as will soon ap-"pear from your concessions."

These words contain a further accusation of my book, which shall be considered in its due place. What I am now upon is the satisfaction your lordship is giving me, in reference to my complaint. And as to that, what follows is brought only to show that your lordship had reason reaſon to ſay, " that my notions were carried beyond " my intentions:" for in theſe words your lordſhip winds up all the following eight or nine pages, viz. " thus far I have endeavoured, with all poſſible brevity " and clearneſs, to lay down your ſenſe about this " matter; by which it is ſufficiently proved, that I had " reaſon to ſay, that your notions were carried beyond " your intentions."

I beg leave to remind your lordſhip, that my complaint was not that your lordſhip ſaid, " that my no- " tions were carried beyond my intentions." I was not ſo abſurd, as to turn what was matter of acknowledgement into matter of complaint. And therefore, in ſhowing the care you had taken of me for my ſatisfaction, your lordſhip needed not to have been at ſo much pains, in ſo long a deduction, to prove to me, that you had reaſon for ſaying what was ſo manifeſtly in my favour, whether you had reaſon for ſaying it or no. But my complaint was, that the new way of reaſoning, accuſed by your lordſhip, as oppoſite to the doctrine of the Trinity, being in laying all foundation of certainty in clear and diſtinct ideas, your lordſhip ranked me amongſt the gentlemen of this new way of reaſoning, though I laid not all foundation of certainty in clear and diſtinct ideas. And this being my complaint, it is for this that there needs a reaſon. Your lordſhip ſubjoins,

" But you ſtill ſeem concerned that I quote your " words; although I declare they were uſed to other " purpoſes than you intended them. I do confeſs to " you, that the reaſon of it was, that I found your " notions, as to certainty by ideas, was the main foun- " dation which the author of Chriſtianity not myſteri- " ous went upon; and that he had nothing which " looked like reaſon, if that principle were removed; " which made me ſo much endeavour to ſhow that it " would not hold. And ſo, I ſuppoſe, the reaſon of " my mentioning your words ſo often, is no longer a " riddle to you."

My lord, he that will give himſelf the trouble to look into that part of my former letter, where I ſpeak of your your lordship's way of proceeding as a riddle to me; or to that, which your lordship here quoted, for my seeming concerned at it; will find my complaint, in both places, as well as several others, was, that I was so every-where joined with others under the comprehensive words of they and them, &c. though my book alone was every-where quoted, "that the world would "be apt to think I was the person who argued against "the Trinity and denied mysteries;" against whom your lordship directed these very pages. For so I express myself in that part, which your lordship here quotes. And as to this, your lordship's way of writing (which is the subject of my complaint) is (for any thing your lordship has in your answer said to give me satisfaction) as much still a riddle to me as ever.

For that which your lordship here says, and is the only thing I can find your lordship has said to clear it, seems to me to do nothing towards it. Your lordship says, "the reason of it was, that you found my no-"tions, as to certainty by ideas, was the main founda-"tion which the author of Christianity not mysterious "went upon," &c.

With submission, I thought your lordship had found, that the foundation, which the author of Christianity not mysterious went upon, and for which he was made one of the gentlemen of the new way of reasoning, opposite to the doctrine of the Trinity, was, that he made, or supposed, clear and distinct ideas necessary to certainty; but that is not my notion, as to certainty by ideas. My notion of certainty by ideas is, that certainty consists in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of ideas, such as we have, whether they be in all their parts perfectly clear and distinct or no: nor have I any notions of certainty more than this one. And if your lordship had for this called me a gentleman of a new way of reasoning, or made me one of the opposers of the doctrine of the Trinity, I should perhaps have wondered; but should not at all have complained of your lordship, for directly questioning this or any of my opinions: I should only have examined what your lordship had said to support, or have desired desired you to make out, that charge against me; which is what I shall do by and by, when I come to examine what your lordship now charges this opinion with: but I shall not add any complaints to my defence.

That which I complained of, was, that I was made one of the gentlemen of the new way of reasoning, without being guilty of what made them so; and so was brought into a chapter, wherein I thought myself not concerned: which was managed so, that my book was all along quoted, and others argued against; others were entitled to what I had said, and I to what others said, without knowing why, or how. Nor am I yet, I must own, much enlightened in the reason of it: that was the cause why I then thought it a new way of writing; and that must be my apology for thinking so still, till I light upon, or am directed to, some author who has ever writ thus before.

And thus I come to the end of what your lordship has said, to that part of my letter which your lordship calls my complaint; wherein, I think, I have omitted nothing which your lordship has alleged for the satisfaction of others, or myself, under those two heads, of the occasion of your lordship's way of writing as you did, and the care you took not to be misunderstood. And if, my lord, as to me, it has not possibly had all the success your lordship proposed; I beg your lordship to attribute it to my dulness, or any thing rather than an unwillingness to be satisfied.

My lord, I so little love controversy, that I never began a dispute with any-body; nor shall ever continue it, where others begin with me, any longer than the appearance of truth, which first made me write, obliges me not to quit it. But least of all, would I have any controversy with your lordship, if I had any design in writing, but the defence of truth. I do not know my own weakness, or your lordship's strength so little, as to enter the lists with your lordship only for a trial of skill, or the vain and ridiculous hopes of victory. Nothing, I know, but truth on my side, can support me against so great a man; whose very name in writing and authority, in the learned world, is of weight enough to to crush and sink whatever opinion has not that solid basis to bear it up.

There are men that enter into disputes to get a name in controversy, or for some little by-ends of a party: your lordship has been so long in the first rank of the men of letters, and by common consent settled at the top of this learned age, that it must pass for the utmost folly, not to think, that if your lordship condescended so far, as to meddle with any of the opinions of so inconsiderable a man as I am, it was with a design to convince me of my errours, and not to gain reputation on one so infinitely below your match. It is upon this ground that I still continue to offer my doubts to your lordship, in those parts wherein I am not yet so happy as to be convinced; and it is with this satisfaction I return this answer to your lordship, that if I am in a mistake, your lordship will certainly detect it, and lead me into the truth; which I shall embrace, with the acknowledgement of the benefit I have received from your lordship's instructions. And that your lordship, in the mean time, will have the goodness to allow me, as becomes a scholar, willing to profit by the favour you do me, to show your lordship where I stick, and in what points your lordship's arguments have failed to work upon me. For, as on the one side it would not become one that would learn of your lordship to acknowledge himself convinced, before he is convinced; and I know your lordship would blame me for it, if I should do so: so on the other side, to continue to dissent from your lordship, where you have done me the honour to take pains with me, without giving you my reasons for it, would, I think, be an ungrateful and unmannerly sullenness.

Your lordship has had the goodness to write several leaves, to give me satisfaction as to the matter of my complaints. I return your lordship my most humble thanks for this great condescension; which I take as a pledge, that you will bear with the representation of my doubts, in other points, wherein I am so unlucky as not to be yet thoroughly enlightened by your lordship. And so I go on to the remaining parts of your letter, which, I think, may be comprehended under theſe two, viz. thoſe things in my Eſſay, which your lordſhip now charges, as concerned in the controverſy of the Trinity; and others, as faulty in themſelves, whether we conſider them with reſpect to any doctrines of religion or no.

letter,

In the cloſe of your lordſhip's letter, after ſome other expreſſions of civility to me, for which I return your lordſhip my thanks, I find theſe words: "I do aſſure "you, that it is out of no diſreſpect, or the leaſt ill-will "to you, that I have again conſidered this matter; but "becauſe I am further convinced, that as you have "ſtated your notion of ideas, it may be of dangerous "conſequence to that article of the chriſtian faith, "which I endeavour to defend."

This now is a direct charge againſt my book; and I muſt own it a great ſatisfaction to me, that I ſhall now be no longer at a loſs, who it is your lordſhip means; that I ſhall ſtand by myſelf, and myſelf anſwer for my own faults, and not be ſo placed in ſuch an aſſociation with others, that will hinder me from knowing what is my particular guilt and ſhare in the accuſation. Had your lordſhip done me the favour to have treated me ſo before, you had heard nothing of all thoſe complaints which have been ſo troubleſome to your lordſhip.

To take now a right view of this matter, it is fit to conſider the beginning and progreſs of it: your lordſhip had a controverſy with the unitarians; they, in their anſwer to your lordſhip's ſermons, and elſewhere, talk of ideas; the author of Chriſtianity not myſterious, whether an unitarian or no, your lordſhip ſays not, neither do I inquire, gives an account of reaſon, which, as your lordſhip ſays, ſuppoſes certainty to conſiſt only in clear and diſtinct ideas; and becauſe he expreſſes himſelf in ſome other things conformable to what I had ſaid in my book, my book is brought into the controverſy, though there be no ſuch opinion in it, as your lordſhip oppoſed. For what that was, is plain both from what has been obſerved out of the beginning of the tenth chapter of your Vindication of the Trinity, and alſo in your letter, viz. this propoſition, "that certainty, as to

"matters

" matters of faith, is founded upon clear and diſtinct " ideas:" but my book not having that propoſition in it, which your lordſhip then oppoſed, as overthrowing myſteries of faith, at that time, fell, by I know not what chance and misfortune, into the unitarian controverſy.

Upon examination, my book being not found guilty of that propoſition, which your lordſhip, in your Vindication of the doctrine of the Trinity, oppoſed, becauſe it overthrows the myſteries of faith; I thought it acquitted, and clear from that controverſy. No, it muſt not eſcape ſo: your lordſhip having again conſidered this matter, has found new matter of accuſation, and a new charge is brought againſt my book; and what now is it? even this, " That as I have ſtated the notion of " ideas, it may be of dangerous conſequence to that " article of the chriſtian faith, which your lordſhip has " endeavoured to defend."

The accuſation then, as it now ſtands, is, that my notion of ideas may be of dangerous conſequence, &c.

Such an accuſation as this brought in any court in England, would, no doubt, be thought to ſhow a great inclination to have the accuſed be ſuſpected, rather than any evidence of being guilty of any thing; and ſo would immediately be diſmiſſed, without hearing any plea to it. But in controverſies in print, wherein an appeal is made to the judgment of mankind, the ſtrict rules of proceeding in juſtice, are not always thought neceſſary to be obſerved; and the ſentence of thoſe who are appealed to, being never formally pronounced, a cauſe can never be diſmiſſed as long as the proſecutor is pleaſed to continue or renew his charge.

As to the matter in hand, though what your lordſhip ſays here againſt my book, be nothing but your apprehenſion of what may be; yet nobody will think it ſtrange, or unſuitable to your lordſhip's character and ſtation, to be watchful over any article of the chriſtian faith, eſpecially one that you have endeavoured to defend; and to warn the world of any thing your lordſhip may ſuſpect to be of dangerous conſequence to it, as far as you can eſpy it. And to this give me leave, my lord, to attribute the trouble your lordſhip has been at, to write again in this matter.

Another thing I muſt take notice of, in this your lordſhip's new charge againſt my book, that it is againſt my notion of ideas, as I have ſtated it. This containing all that I have ſaid in my Eſſay concerning ideas, which, as your lordſhip takes notice, is not a little; your lordſhip, I know, would not be thought to leave ſo general an accuſation upon my book, as you could receive no anſwer to: and therefore though your lordſhip has not been pleaſed plainly to ſpecify here the particulars of my notion of ideas, which your lordſhip apprehends to be of dangerous conſequence to that article which your lordſhip has defended; I ſhall endeavour to find them, in other parts of your letter.

Your lordſhip's words, in the immediately preceding page, run thus: "I can eaſily bear the putting of phi-
"loſophical notions into a modern and faſhionable
"dreſs."

"Let men expreſs their minds by ideas, if they
"pleaſe; and take pleaſure in ſorting, and comparing,
"and connecting of them, I am not forward to con"demn them: for every age muſt have its new modes;
"and it is very well, if truth and reaſon be received in "any garb. I was therefore far enough from condemn"ing your way of ideas, till I found it made the only
"ground of certainty, and made uſe of to overthrow "the myſteries of our faith, as I told you in the begin"ning."

Theſe words, leading to your lordſhip's accuſation, I thought the likelieſt to ſhow me what it was in my book, that your lordſhip now declared againſt, as what might be of dangerous conſequence to that article you have defended; and that ſeemed to me to lie in thoſe two particulars, viz. the making ſo much uſe of the word ideas; and my placing, as I do, certainty in ideas, i. e. in the things ſignified by them. And theſe two ſeem here to be the particulars which your lordſhip comprehends under my way by ideas. But that I might not be led into miſtake by this paſſage, which ſeemed a little more obſcure and doubtful to me, than I could have have wished; I consulted those other places, wherein your lordship seemed to express, what it was that your lordship now accused in my book, in reference to the unitarian controversy; and which your lordship apprehends may be of dangerous consequence to that article.

Your lordship, in the close of the words above-quoted, out of your answer, tells me: "you were far enough "from condemning my way of ideas, till your lord-"ship found it made the only ground of certainty, and "made use of to overthrow the mysteries of our faith, "as you told me in the beginning."

My lord, the way of ideas which your lordship opposed at first, was the way of certainty only by clear and distinct ideas; as appears by your words above-quoted: but that, your lordship now knows, was not my way of certainty by ideas, and therefore that, and all the use can be made of it to overthrow the mysteries of our faith, be that as it will, cannot any more be charged on my book, but is quite out of doors: and therefore what you said in the beginning, gave me no light into what was your lordship's present accusation.

But a little farther on I found these words: "when "new terms are made use of, by ill men, to promote "scepticism and infidelity, and to overthrow the mys-"teries of our faith, we have then reason to inquire into "them, and to examine the foundation and tendency of "them. And this was the true and only reason of my "looking into this way of certainty, by ideas, because "I found it applied to such purposes."

Here, my lord, your lordship seems to lay your accusation wholly against new terms and their tendency.

And in another place your lordship has these words:

"The world hath been strangely amused with ideas "of late; and we have been told, that strange things "might be done by the help of ideas; and yet these "ideas, at last, come to be only common notions of "things, which we must make use of in our reasoning. "You [i. e. the author of the Essay concerning Human "Understanding] say in that chapter, about the exist-"ence of God, you thought it most proper to express "yourself, in the most usual and familiar way, by com" mon words and expreſſions. I would you had done " ſo quite through your book: for then you had never " given that occaſion to the enemies of our faith to " take up your new way of ideas, as an effectual battery " (as they imagined) againſt the myſteries of the chriſ- " tian faith. But you might have enjoyed the ſatisfac- " tion of your ideas long enough, before I had taken " notice of them, unleſs I had found them employed " about doing miſchief."

By which places it is plain, that that which your lordſhip apprehends in my book, " may be of dangerous " conſequence to the article which your lordſhip has " endeavoured to defend," is my introducing new terms; and that which your lordſhip inſtances in, is that of ideas. And the reaſon your lordſhip gives, in every of theſe places, why your lordſhip has ſuch an apprehenſion of ideas, as " that they may be of dangerous " conſequence to that article of faith, which your lord- " ſhip has endeavoured to defend, is, becauſe they have " been applied to ſuch purpoſes. And I might (your " lordſhip ſays) have enjoyed the ſatisfaction of my " ideas long enough, before you had taken notice of " them, unleſs your lordſhip had found them employed " in doing miſchief." Which, at laſt, as I humbly conceive, amounts to thus much, and no more, viz. that your lordſhip fears ideas, i. e. the term ideas, may, ſome time or other, prove of very dangerous conſequence to what your lordſhip has endeavoured to defend, becauſe they have been made uſe of in arguing againſt it. For I am ſure your lordſhip does not mean, that you apprehend the things, ſignified by ideas, " may be " of dangerous conſequence to the article of faith your " lordſhip endeavours to defend," becauſe they have been made uſe of againſt it: for (beſides that your lordſhip mentions terms) that would be to expect that thoſe who oppoſe that article, ſhould oppoſe it without any thoughts; for the thing ſignified by ideas, is nothing but the immediate objects of our minds in thinking: ſo that unleſs any one can oppoſe the article your lordſhip defends, without thinking on ſomething, he muſt uſe the things ſignified by ideas; for he that thinks, muſt have have ſome immediate object of his mind in thinking, i. e. muſt have ideas.

But whether it be the name or the thing, ideas in ſound, or ideas in ſignification, that your lordſhip apprehends may be of dangerous conſequence to that article of faith, which your lordſhip endeavours to defend, it ſeems to me, I will not ſay a new way of reaſoning (for that belongs to me) but were it not your lordſhip's, I ſhould think it a very extraordinary way of reaſoning, to write againſt a book, wherein your lordſhip acknowledges they are not uſed to bad purpoſes, nor employed to do miſchief: only becauſe that you find that ideas are, by thoſe who oppoſe your lordſhip, employed to do miſchief; and ſo apprehend they may be of dangerous conſequence to the article your lordſhip has engaged in the defence of. For whether ideas as terms, or ideas as the immediate objects of the mind ſignified by thoſe terms, may be, in your lordſhip's apprehenſion, of dangerous conſequence to that article; I do not ſee how your lordſhip's writing againſt the notion of ideas, as ſtated in my book, will at all hinder your oppoſers from employing them in doing miſchief, as before.

However, be that as it will, ſo it is, that your lordſhip apprehends theſe "new terms, theſe ideas, with "which the world hath, of late, been ſo ſtrangely "amuſed (though at laſt they come to be only common "notions of things, as your lordſhip owns) may be of "dangerous conſequence to that article."

My lord, if any, in their anſwer to your lordſhip's ſermons, and in their other pamphlets, wherein your lordſhip complains they have talked ſo much of ideas, have been troubleſome to your lordſhip with that term; it is not ſtrange that your lordſhip ſhould be tired with that ſound: but how natural ſoever it be to our weak conſtitutions to be offended with any ſound, wherewith an importunate din hath been made about our ears; yet, my lord, I know your lordſhip has a better opinion of the articles of our faith, than to think any of them can be overturned, or ſo much as ſhaken with a breath, formed into any ſound or term whatſoever.

Names are but the arbitrary marks of conceptions; and ſo they be ſufficiently appropriated to them in their uſe, I know no other difference any of them have in particular, but as they are of eaſy or difficult pronunciation, and of a more or leſs pleaſant ſound: and what particular antipathies there may be in men, to ſome of them upon that account, is not eaſy to be foreſeen. This I am ſure, no term whatſoever in itſelf bears, one more than another, any oppoſition to truth of any kind; they are only propoſitions that do, or can oppoſe the truth of any article or doctrine: and thus no term is privileged from being ſet in oppoſition to truth.

There is no word to be found, which may not be brought into a propoſition, wherein the moſt ſacred and moſt evident truths may be oppoſed; but that is not a fault in the term, but him that uſes it. And therefore I cannot eaſily perſuade myſelf (whatever your lordſhip hath ſaid in the heat of your concern) that you have beſtowed ſo much pains upon my book, becauſe the word idea is ſo much uſed there. For though upon my ſaying, in my chapter about the exiſtence of God, "that I "ſcarce uſed the word idea in that whole chapter; your "lordſhip wiſhes, that I had done ſo quite through my "book;" yet I muſt rather look upon that as a compliment to me, wherein your lordſhip wiſhed, that my book had been all through ſuited to vulgar readers, not uſed to that and the like terms, than that your lordſhip has ſuch an apprehenſion of the word idea; or that there is any ſuch harm in the uſe of it, inſtead of the word notion (with which your lordſhip ſeems to take it to agree in ſignification) that your lordſhip would think it worth your while to ſpend any part of your valuable time and thoughts about my book, for having the word idea ſo often in it: for this would be to make your lordſhip to write only againſt an impropriety of ſpeech. I own to your lordſhip, it is a great condeſcenſion in your lordſhip to have done it, if that word have ſuch a ſhare in what your lordſhip has writ againſt my book, as ſome expreſſions would perſuade one; and I would, for the ſatisfaction of your lordſhip, change the term of idea for a better, if your lordſhip, or any one, could help me to it.

it. For, that notion will not so well stand for every immediate object of the mind in thinking, as idea does, I have (as I guess) somewhere given a reason in my book; by showing that the term notion is more peculiarly appropriated to a certain sort of those objects, which I call mixed modes: and, I think, it would not sound altogether so well, to say the notion of red, and the notion of a horse; as the idea of red, and the idea of a horse. But if any one thinks it will, I contend not; for I have no fondness for, nor antipathy to, any particular articulate sounds: nor do I think there is any spell or fascination in any of them.

But be the word idea proper or improper, I do not see how it is the better or worse, because ill men have made use of it, or because it has been made use of to bad purposes; for if that be a reason to condemn, or lay it by, we must lay by the terms of scripture, reason, perception, distinct, clear, &c. nay, the name of God himself will not escape: for I do not think any one of these, or any other term, can be produced, which has not been made use of by such men, and to such purposes. And therefore, "if the unitarians, in their late pamphlets, have talked very much of, and strangely "amused the world with ideas;" I cannot believe your lordship will think that word one jot the worse, or the more dangerous, because they use it; any more than, for their use of them, you will think reason or scripture terms ill or dangerous. And therefore what your lordship says, that "I might have enjoyed the satisfaction "of my ideas long enough, before your lordship had "taken notice of them, unless you had found them employed in doing mischief;" will, I presume, when your lordship has considered again of this matter, prevail with your lordship to let me enjoy still the satisfaction I take in my ideas, i. e. as much satisfaction as I can take in so small a matter, as is the using of a proper term, notwithstanding it should be employed by others in doing mischief.

For, my lord, if I should leave it wholly out of my book, and substitute the word notion every where in the room of it; and every body else do so too (though your lordlordſhip does not, I ſuppoſe, ſuſpect that I have the vanity to think they would follow my example) my book would, it ſeems, be the more to your lordſhip's liking: but I do not ſee how this would one jot abate the miſchief your lordſhip complains of. For the unitarians might as much employ notions, as they do now ideas, to do miſchief: unleſs they are ſuch fools as to think they can conjure with this notable word idea; and that the force of what they ſay lies in the ſound, and not in the ſignification of their terms.

This I am ſure of, that the truths of the chriſtian religion can be no more battered by one word than another; nor can they be beaten down or endangered, by any ſound whatſoever. And I am apt to flatter myſelf, that your lordſhip is ſatisfied there is no harm in the word ideas, becauſe you ſay you ſhould not have taken any notice of my ideas, "if the enemies of our faith had "not taken up my new way of ideas, as an effectual "battery againſt the myſteries of the chriſtian faith." In which place, by new way of ideas, nothing, I think, can be conſtrued to be meant, but my expreſſing myſelf by that of ideas; and not by other more common words, and of ancienter ſtanding in the Engliſh language.

My new way by ideas, or my way by ideas, which often occurs in your lordſhip's letter, is, I confeſs, a very large and doubtful expreſſion: and may, in the full latitude, comprehend my whole Eſſay: becauſe treating in it of the underſtanding, which is nothing but the faculty of thinking, I could not well treat of that faculty of the mind, which conſiſts in thinking, without conſidering the immediate objects of the mind in thinking, which I call ideas: and therefore in treating of the underſtanding, I gueſs it will not be thought ſtrange, that the greateſt part of my book has been taken up, in conſidering what theſe objects of the mind, in thinking, are; whence they come; what uſe the mind makes of them, in its ſeveral ways of thinking; and what are the outward marks whereby it ſignifies them to others, or records them for its own uſe. And this, in ſhort, is my way by ideas, that which your lordſhip calls my new way by ideas: which, my lord, if it be new, it is but but a new history of an old thing. For I think it will not be doubted, that men always performed the actions of thinking, reasoning, believing, and knowing, just after the same manner that they do now: though whether the same account has heretofore been given of the way how they performed these actions, or wherein they consisted, I do not know. Were I as well read as your lordship, I should have been safe from that gentle reprimand of your lordship's, for "thinking my way of ideas "new, for want of looking into other men's thoughts, "which appear in their books."

Your lordship's words, as an acknowledgement of your instructions in the case, and as a warning to others, who will be so bold adventurers as to spin any thing barely out of their own thoughts, I shall set down at large: and they run thus: "whether you took this way "of ideas from the modern philosopher, mentioned by "you, is not at all material; but I intended no reflection "upon you in it (for that you mean by my commend-"ing you as a scholar of so great a master) I never "meant to take from you the honour of your own in-"ventions: and I do believe you, when you say, that "you wrote from your own thoughts, and the ideas "you had there. But many things may seem new to "one, who converses only with his own thoughts, which "really are not so; as he may find, when he looks into "the thoughts of other men, which appear in their "books. And therefore, although I have a just esteem "for the invention of such, who can spin volumes "barely out of their own thoughts; yet I am apt to "think they would oblige the world more, if, after "they have thought so much of themselves, they would "examine what thoughts others have had before them, "concerning the same things: that so those may not "be thought their own inventions, which are common "to themselves and others. If a man should try all "the magnetical experiments himself, and publish "them as his own thoughts, he might take himself to "be the inventor of them: but he that examines and "compares with them what Gilbert and others have "done before him, will not diminish the praise of his

" diligence, but may wiſh he had compared his thoughts " with other men's; by which the world would receive " greater advantage, although he loſt the honour of " being an original."

To alleviate my fault herein, I agree with your lordſhip, " that many things may ſeem new to one that con- " verſes only with his own thoughts, which really are " not ſo:" but I muſt crave leave to ſuggeſt to your lordſhip, that if, in the ſpinning them out of his own thoughts, they ſeem new to him, he is certainly the inventor of them; and they may as juſtly be thought his own invention, as any one's; and he is as certainly the inventor of them, as any one who thought on them before him: the diſtinction of invention, or not invention, lying not in thinking firſt or not firſt, but in borrowing or not borrowing your thoughts from another: and he to whom ſpinning them out of his own thoughts, they ſeem new, could not certainly borrow them from another. So he truly invented printing in Europe, who, without any communication with the Chineſe, ſpun it out of his own thoughts; though it were ever ſo true, that the Chineſe had the uſe of printing, nay, of printing in the very ſame way, among them, many ages before him. So that he that ſpins any thing out of his own thoughts, that ſeems new to him, cannot ceaſe to think it his own invention, ſhould he examine ever ſo far what thoughts others have had before him, concerning the ſame thing; and ſhould find, by examining, that they had the ſame thoughts too.

But what great obligation this would be to the world, or weighty cauſe of turning over and looking into books, I confeſs I do not ſee. The great end to me, in converſing with my own or other men's thoughts in matters of ſpeculation, is to find truth, without being much concerned whether my own ſpinning of it out of mine, or their ſpinning of it out of their own thoughts, helps me to it. And how little I affect the honour of an original, may be ſeen in that place of my book, where, if any where, that itch of vain-glory was likelieſt to have ſhown itſelf, had I been ſo over-run with it, as to need a cure. It is where I ſpeak of certainty, in theſe following lowing words, taken notice of by your lordship in another place: "I think I have shown wherein it is that "certainty, real certainty, consists; which, whatever "it was to others, was, I confess, to me heretofore one "of those desiderata, which I found great want of."

Here, my lord, however new this seemed to me, and the more so because possibly I had in vain hunted for it in the books of others; yet I spoke of it as new, only to myself; leaving others in the undisturbed possession of what either by invention or reading was theirs before; without assuming to myself any other honour, but that of my own ignorance till that time, if others before had shown wherein certainty lay. And yet, my lord, if I had upon this occasion been forward to assume to myself the honour of an original, I think I had been pretty safe in it; since I should have had your lordship for my guarantee and vindicator in that point, who are pleased to call it new; and, as such, to write against it.

And truly, my lord, in this respect my book has had very unlucky stars, since it hath had the misfortune to displease your lordship, with many things in it, for their novelty; as "new way of reasoning; new hypo-"thesis about reason; new sort of certainty; new "terms; new way of ideas; new method of certainty," &c. and yet in other places your lordship seems to think it worthy in me of your lordship's reflection, for saying but what others have said before. As where I say, "in the different make of men's tempers and "application of their thoughts, some arguments pre-"vail more on one, and some on another, for the con-"firmation of the same truth:" your lordship asks, "what is this different from what all men of under-"standing have said?" Again, I take it your lordship meant not these words for a commendation of my book, where you say; "but if no more be meant by "the simple ideas that come in by sensation or reflec-"tion, and their being the foundation of our know-"ledge;" but that our notions of things come in, either from our senses, or the exercise of our minds: as there is nothing extraordinary in the discovery, so your your lordſhip is far enough from oppoſing that, wherein you think all mankind are agreed.

And again, " but what need all this great noiſe " about ideas and certainty, true and real certainty by " ideas; if, after all, it comes only to this, that our " ideas only repreſent to us ſuch things, from whence " we bring arguments to prove the truth of things?"

And " the world hath been ſtrangely amuſed with " ideas of late; and we have been told, that ſtrange " things might be done by the help of ideas; yet theſe " ideas, at laſt, come to be only common notions of " things, which we muſt make uſe of in our reaſon- " ing." And to the like purpoſe in other places.

Whether therefore at laſt your lordſhip will reſolve, that it is new or no, or more faulty by its being new, muſt be left to your lordſhip. This I find by it, that my book cannot avoid being condemned on the one ſide or the other; nor do I ſee a poſſibility to help it. If there be readers that like only new thoughts; or, on the other ſide, others that can bear nothing but what can be juſtified by received authorities in print; I muſt deſire them to make themſelves amends in that part which they like, for the diſpleaſure they receive in the other: but if many ſhould be ſo exact as to find fault with both, truly I know not well what to ſay to them. The caſe is a plain caſe, the book is all over naught, and there is not a ſentence in it that is not, either for its antiquity or novelty, to be condemned; and ſo there is a ſhort end of it. From your lordſhip indeed in particular, I can hope for ſomething better; for your lordſhip thinks the general deſign of it ſo good, that that, I flatter myſelf, would prevail on your lordſhip to preſerve it from the fire.

But as to the way your lordſhip thinks I ſhould have taken to prevent the having it thought my invention, when it was common to me with others; it unluckily ſo fell out, in the ſubject of my Eſſay of Human Underſtanding, that I could not look into the thoughts of other men to inform myſelf. For my deſign being, as well as I could, to copy nature, and to give an account of

of the operations of the mind in thinking, I could look into no-body's understanding but my own, to see how it wrought; nor have a prospect into other men's minds to view their thoughts there, and observe what steps and motions they took, and by what gradations they proceeded in their acquainting themselves with truth, and their advance to knowledge. What we find of their thoughts in books, is but the result of this, and not the progress and working of their minds, in coming to the opinions or conclusions they set down and published.

All therefore that I can say of my book is, that it is a copy of my own mind, in its several ways of operation. And all that I can say for the publishing of it, is, that I think the intellectual faculties are made, and operate alike in most men; and that some, that I showed it to before I published it, liked it so well that I was confirmed in that opinion. And therefore if it should happen, that it should not be so, but that some men should have ways of thinking, reasoning, or arriving at certainty, different from others, and above those that I find my mind to use and acquiesce in, I do not see of what use my book can be to them. I can only make it my humble request, in my own name, and in the name of those that are of my size, who find their minds work, reason, and know, in the same low way that mine does, that those men of a more happy genius would show us the way of their nobler flights; and particularly would discover to us their shorter or surer way to certainty, than by ideas, and the observing their agreement or disagreement.

In the mean time, I must acknowledge, that, if I had been guilty of affecting to be thought an original, a correction could not have come from any body so disinterested in the case, as your lordship; since your lordship so much declines being thought an original, for writing in a way wherein it is hard to avoid thinking that you are the first, till some other can be produced that writ so before you.

But to return to your lordship's present charge against my book: in your lordship's answer, I find these words:

words: " in an age, wherein the myſteries of faith are " ſo much expoſed, by the promoters of ſcepticiſm " and infidelity; it is a thing of dangerous conſe- " quence, to ſtart ſuch new methods of certainty, as " are apt to leave men's minds more doubtful than " before."

By which paſſage, and ſome expreſſions that ſeem to look that way, in the places above-quoted; I take it for granted, that another particular in my book, which your lordſhip ſuſpects may be of dangerous conſequence to that article of faith which your lordſhip has endeavoured to defend, is my placing of certainty as I do, in the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of our ideas.

Though I cannot conceive how any term, new or old, idea or not idea, can have any oppoſition or danger in it, to any article of faith, or any truth whatſoever; yet I eaſily grant, that propoſitions are capable of being oppoſite to propoſitions, and may be ſuch as, if granted, may overthrow articles of faith, or any other truth they are oppoſite to. But your lordſhip not having, as I remember, ſhown, or gone about to ſhow, how this propoſition, viz. that certainty conſiſts in the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of two ideas, is oppoſite or inconſiſtent with that article of faith which your lordſhip has endeavoured to defend: it is plain, it is but your lordſhip's fear, that it may be of dangerous conſequence to it; which, as I humbly conceive, is no proof that it is any way inconſiſtent with that article.

No-body, I think, can blame your lordſhip, or any one elſe, for being concerned for any article of the Chriſtian faith: but if that concern (as it may, and as we know it has done) makes any one apprehend danger, where no danger is; are we therefore to give up and condemn any propoſition, becauſe any one, though of the firſt rank and magnitude, fears it may be of dangerous conſequence to any truth of religion, without ſaying that it is ſo? If ſuch fears be the meaſures whereby to judge of truth and falſehood, the affirming that there are antipodes would be ſtill a hereſy; and the doctrine of of the motion of the earth must be rejected, as overthrowing the truth of the scripture: for of that dangerous consequence it has been apprehended to be, by many learned and pious divines, out of their great concern for religion. And yet, notwithstanding those great apprehensions of what dangerous consequence it might be, it is now universally received by learned men, as an undoubted truth; and writ for by some, whose belief of the scriptures is not at all questioned; and particularly, very lately, by a divine of the church of England, with great strength of reason, in his wonderfully ingenious New Theory of the earth.

The reason your lordship gives of your fears, that it may be of such dangerous consequence to that article of faith which your lordship endeavours to defend, though it occurs in many more places than one, is only this, viz. that it is made use of by ill men to do mischief, i. e. to oppose that article of faith, which your lordship has endeavoured to defend. But, my lord, if it be a reason to lay by any thing as bad, because it is, or may be used to an ill purpose; I know not what will be innocent enough to be kept. Arms, which were made for our defence, are sometimes made use of to do mischief; and yet they are not thought of dangerous consequence for all that. No-body lays by his sword and pistols, or thinks them of such dangerous consequence as to be neglected, or thrown away, because robbers and the worst of men sometimes make use of them to take away honest men's lives or goods. And the reason is, because they were designed, and will serve to preserve them. And who knows but this may be the present case? If your lordship thinks that placing of certainty in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of ideas be to be rejected as false, because you apprehend it may be of dangerous consequence to that article of faith; on the other side, perhaps others, with me, may think it a defence against errour, and so (as being of good use) to be received and adhered to.

I would not, my lord, be hereby thought to set up my own, or any one's judgment against your lordship's: but I have said this only to show, while the argument lies lies for or againſt the truth of any propoſition, barely in an imagination, that it may be of conſequence to the ſupporting or overthrowing of any remote truth; it will be impoſſible, that way, to determine of the truth or falſehood of that propoſition. For imagination will be ſet up againſt imagination, and the ſtronger probably will be againſt your lordſhip; the ſtrongeſt imaginations being uſually in the weakeſt heads. The only way, in this caſe, to put it paſt doubt, is to ſhow the inconſiſtency of the two propoſitions; and then it will be ſeen, that one overthrows the other; the true the falſe one.

Your lordſhip ſays indeed, this is a new method of certainty. I will not ſay ſo myſelf, for fear of deſerving a ſecond reproof from your lordſhip, for being too forward to aſſume to myſelf the honour of being an original. But this, I think, gives me occaſion, and will excuſe me from being thought impertinent, if I aſk your lordſhip whether there be any other or older method of certainty? and what it is? For if there be no other, nor older than this, either this was always the method of certainty, and ſo mine is no new one; or elſe the world is obliged to me for this new one, after having been ſo long in the want of ſo neceſſary a thing, as a method of certainty. If there be an older, I am ſure your lordſhip cannot but know it; your condemning mine as new, as well as your thorough inſight into antiquity, cannot but ſatisfy every body that you do. And therefore to ſet the world right in a thing of that great concernment, and to overthrow mine, and thereby prevent the dangerous conſequence there is in my having unſeaſonably ſtarted it, will not, I humbly conceive, miſbecome your lordſhip's care of that article you have endeavoured to defend, nor the good-will you bear to truth in general. For I will be anſwerable for myſelf, that I ſhall; and I think I may be for all others, that they all will give off the placing of certainty in the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of ideas, if your lordſhip will be pleaſed to ſhow that it lies in any thing elſe.

But

But truly, and not to ascribe to myself an invention of what has been as old as knowledge is in the world, I must own, I am not guilty of what your lordship is pleased to call starting new methods of certainty. Knowledge, ever since there has been any in the world, has consisted in one particular action of the mind; and so, I conceive, will continue to do to the end of it: and to start new methods of knowledge and certainty, (for they are to me the same thing) i. e. to find out and propose new methods of attaining knowledge, either with more ease and quickness, or in things yet unknown, is what I think no-body could blame: but this is not that which your lordship here means by new methods of certainty. Your lordship, I think, means by it the placing of certainty in something, wherein either it does not consist, or else wherein it was not placed before now; if this be to be called a new method of certainty. As to the latter of these, I shall know whether I am guilty or no, when your lordship will do me the favour to tell me, wherein it was placed before: which your lordship knows I professed myself ignorant of, when I writ my book, and so am still. But if starting of new methods of certainty, be the placing of certainty in something wherein it does not consist; whether I have done that or no, I must appeal to the experience of mankind.

There are several actions of men's minds that they are conscious to themselves of performing, as willing, believing, knowing, &c. which they have so particular a sense of, that they can distinguish them one from another; or else they could not say when they willed, when they believed, and when they knew any thing. But though these actions were different enough from one another, not to be confounded by those who spoke of them; yet no-body, that I had met with, had, in their writings, particularly set down wherein the act of knowing precisely consisted.

To this reflection upon the actions of my own mind, the subject of my Essay concerning Human Understanding naturally led me; wherein, if I have done any thing new, it has been to describe to others more particularly ticularly than had been done before, what it is their minds do, when they perform that action which they call knowing: and if, upon examination, they obſerve I have given a true account of that action of their minds in all the parts of it; I ſuppoſe it will be in vain to diſpute againſt what they find and feel in themſelves. And if I have not told them right, and exactly what they find and feel in themſelves, when their minds perform the act of knowing, what I have ſaid will be all in vain; men will not be perſuaded againſt their ſenſes. Knowledge is an internal perception of their minds; and if, when they reflect on it, they find it is not what I have ſaid it is, my groundleſs conceit will not be hearkened to, but exploded by every body, and die of itſelf; and no-body need to be at any pains to drive it out of the world. So impoſſible is it to find out, or ſtart new methods of certainty, or to have them received, if any one places it in any thing but in that wherein it really conſiſts: much leſs can any one be in danger to be miſled into errour, by any ſuch new, and to every one viſibly ſenſeleſs project. Can it be ſuppoſed, that any one could ſtart a new method of ſeeing, and perſuade men thereby, that they do not ſee what they do ſee? Is it to be feared, that any one can caſt ſuch a miſt over their eyes that they ſhould not know when they ſee, and ſo be led out of their way by it?

Knowledge, I find, in myſelf; and, I conceive, in others; conſiſts in the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of the immediate objects of the mind in thinking, which I call ideas: but whether it does ſo in others or no, muſt be determined by their own experience, reflecting upon the action of their mind in knowing; for that I cannot alter, nor I think they themſelves. But whether they will call thoſe immediate objects of their mind in thinking ideas or no, is perfectly in their own choice. If they diſlike that name, they may call them notions or conceptions, or how they pleaſe; it matters not, if they uſe them ſo as to avoid obſcurity and confuſion. If they are conſtantly uſed in the ſame and a known ſenſe, every one has the liberty to pleaſe himſelf in his terms; there lies neither truth, nor errour, nor science, in that; though those that take them for things, and not for what they are, bare arbitrary signs of our ideas, make a great deal of ado often about them, as if some great matter lay in the use of this or that sound. All that I know or can imagine of difference about them, is, that those words are always best, whose significations are best known in the sense they are used; and so are least apt to breed confusion.

nor

My lord, your lordship has been pleased to find fault with my use of the new term, ideas, without telling me a better name for the immediate objects of the mind in thinking. Your lordship has also been pleased to find fault with my definition of knowledge, without doing me the favour to give me a better. For it is only about my definition of knowledge, that all this stir, concerning certainty, is made. For with me, to know and be certain, is the same thing; what I know, that I am certain of; and what I am certain of, that I know. What reaches to knowledge, I think may be called certainty; and what comes short of certainty, I think cannot be called knowledge; as your lordship could not but observe in § 18. of ch. iv. of my fourth book, which you have quoted.

My definition of knowledge, in the beginning of the fourth book of my Essay, stands thus: "knowledge "seems to me to be nothing but the perception of the "connexion and agreement or disagreement and re-"pugnancy of any of our ideas." This definition your lordship dislikes, and apprehends "it may be of "dangerous consequence as to that article of christian "faith which your lordship has endeavoured to de-"fend." For this there is a very easy remedy: it is but for your lordship to set aside this definition of knowledge by giving us a better, and this danger is over. But your lordship chooses rather to have a controversy with my book, for having it in it, and to put me upon the defence of it; for which I must acknowledge myself obliged to your lordship, for affording me so much of your time, and for allowing me the honour of conversing so much with one so far above me in all respects.

Your lordſhip ſays, " it may be of dangerous conſe-
" quence to that article of chriſtian faith, which you
" have endeavoured to defend." Though the laws of diſputing allow bare denial as a ſufficient anſwer to ſayings, without any offer of a proof; yet, my lord, to ſhow how willing I am to give your lordſhip all ſatisfaction, in what you apprehend may be of dangerous conſequence in my book, as to that article, I ſhall not ſtand ſtill ſullenly, and put your lordſhip upon the difficulty of ſhowing wherein that danger lies; but ſhall, on the other ſide, endeavour to ſhow your lordſhip that that definition of mine, whether true or falſe, right or wrong, can be of no dangerous conſequence to that article of faith. The reaſon which I ſhall offer for it, is this; becauſe it can be of no conſequence to it at all.

That which your lordſhip is afraid it may be dangerous to, is an article of faith: that which your lordſhip labours and is concerned for, is the certainty of faith. Now, my lord, I humbly conceive the certainty of faith, if your lordſhip thinks fit to call it ſo, has nothing to do with the certainty of knowledge. And to talk of the certainty of faith, ſeems all one to me, as to talk of the knowledge of believing; a way of ſpeaking not eaſy to me to underſtand.

Place knowledge in what you will, " ſtart what new " methods of certainty you pleaſe, that are apt to
" leave men's minds more doubtful than before;" place certainty on ſuch grounds as will leave little or no knowledge in the world; (for theſe are the arguments your lordſhip uſes againſt my definition of knowledge) this ſhakes not at all, nor in the leaſt concerns the aſſurance of faith; that is quite diſtinct from it, neither ſtands nor falls with knowledge.

Faith ſtands by itſelf, and upon grounds of its own; nor can be removed from them, and placed on thoſe of knowledge. Their grounds are ſo far from being the ſame, or having any thing common, that when it is brought to certainty, faith is deſtroyed; it is knowledge then, and faith no longer.

With what aſſurance ſoever of believing, I aſſent to any article of faith, ſo that I ſtedfaſtly venture my all upon upon it, it is still but believing. Bring it to certainty, and it ceases to be faith. I believe, that Jesus Christ was crucified, dead and buried, rose again the third day from the dead, and ascended into heaven; let now such methods of knowledge or certainty be started, as leave men's minds more doubtful than before: let the grounds of knowledge be resolved into what any one pleases, it touches not my faith: the foundation of that stands as sure as before, and cannot be at all shaken by it: and one may as well say, that any thing that weakens the sight, or casts a mist before the eyes, endangers the hearing; as that any thing which alters the nature of knowledge (if that could be done) should be of dangerous consequence to an article of faith.

Whether then I am or am not mistaken, in the placing certainty in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of ideas; whether this account of knowledge be true or false, enlarges or straitens the bounds of it more than it should; faith still stands upon its own basis, which is not at all altered by it; and every article of that has just the same unmoved foundation, and the very same credibility that it had before. So that, my lord, whatever I have said about certainty, and how much soever I may be out in it; if I am mistaken, your lordship has no reason to apprehend any danger, to any article of faith, from thence; every one of them stands upon the same bottom it did before, out of the reach of what belongs to knowledge and certainty. And thus much out of my way of certainty by ideas; which, I hope, will satisfy your lordship, how far it is from being dangerous to any article of the christian faith whatsoever.

I find one thing more your lordship charges on me, in reference to the unitarian controversy; and that is, where your lordship says, that "if these [i. e. my no-"tions of nature and person] hold, your lordship does "not see how it is possible to defend the doctrine of the "Trinity."

My lord, since I have a great opinion that your lordship sees as far as any one, and I shall be justified to the world, in relying upon your lordship's foresight more than on any one's; theſe diſcomforting words of your lordſhip's would diſhearten me ſo, that I ſhould be ready to give up what your lordſhip confeſſes ſo untenable; with this acknowledgement however to your lordſhip, as its great defender:

" ——————— Si pergama dextrâ
" Defendi poſſint, etiam hâc defenſa fuiſſent."

This, I ſay, after ſuch a declaration of your lordſhip's, I ſhould think out of a due value for your lordſhip's great penetration and judgment, I had reaſon to do, were it in any other cauſe but that of an article of the chriſtian faith. For theſe, I am ſure, ſhall all be defended and ſtand firm to the world's end; though we are not always ſure, what hand ſhall defend them. I know as much may be expected from your lordſhip's in the caſe, as any body's; and therefore I conclude, when you have taken a view of this matter again, out of the heat of diſpute, you will have a better opinion of the articles of the chriſtian faith, and of your own ability to defend them, than to pronounce, that "if my notions of "nature and perſon hold, your lordſhip cannot ſee how "it is poſſible to defend that article of the chriſtian "faith, which your lordſhip has endeavoured to de-"fend." For it is, methinks, to put that article upon a very tickliſh iſſue, and to render it as ſuſpected and as doubtful as is poſſible to men's minds, that your lordſhip ſhould declare it not poſſible to be defended, if my notions of nature and perſon hold; when all that I can find that your lordſhip excepts againſt, in my notions of nature and perſon, is nothing but this, viz. that theſe are two ſounds, which in themſelves ſignify nothing.

But before I come to examine how by nature and perſon your lordſhip, at preſent in your anſwer, engages me in the unitarian controverſy; it will not be beſide the matter to conſider, how by them your lordſhip at firſt brought my book into it.

In your Vindication of the doctrine of the Trinity, your lordſhip ſays, "the next thing to be cleared in this "diſpute, is the diſtinction between nature and perſon.

"And

" And of this we have no clear and distinct idea from " sensation or reflection: and yet all our notions of the " doctrine of the Trinity depend upon the right under- " standing of it. For we must talk unintelligibly, about " this point, unless we have clear and distinct appre- " hensions concerning nature and person, and the " grounds of identity and distinction: but these come " not into our minds by these simple ideas of sensation " and reflection."

To this I replied, " if it be so, the inference, I should " draw from thence, (if it were fit for me to draw any) " would be this; that it concerns those, who write on " that subject, to have themselves, and to lay down to " others, clear and distinct apprehensions, or notions, " or ideas (call them what you please) of what they " mean by nature and person, and of the grounds of " identity and distinction.

" This appears to me the natural conclusion flowing " from your lordship's words; which seem here to sup- " pose clear and distinct apprehensions (something like " clear and distinct ideas) necessary for the avoiding un- " intelligible talk in the doctrine of the Trinity. But " I do not see how your lordship can, from the necessity " of clear and distinct apprehensions of nature and per- " son, &c. in the dispute of the Trinity, bring in one, " who has perhaps mistaken the way to clear and dis- " tinct notions concerning nature and person, &c. as " fit to be answered among those who bring objections " against the Trinity in point of reason. I do not see " why an unitarian may not as well bring him in, and " argue against his Essay, in a chapter that he should " write, to answer objections against the unity of God, " in point of reason or revelation: for upon what ground " soever any one writes, in this dispute or any other, it " is not tolerable to talk unintelligibly on either side.

" If by the way of ideas, which is that of the author " of the Essay of Human Understanding, a man cannot " come to clear and distinct apprehensions concerning " nature and person; if, as he proposes, from the sim- " ple ideas of sensation and reflection, such apprehen- " sions cannot be got; it will follow from thence that " he is a miſtaken philoſopher: but it will not follow " from thence, that he is not an orthodox chriſtian; for " he might (as he did) write his Eſſay of Human Un- " derſtanding, without any thought of the controverſy " between the trinitarians and the unitarians. Nay, a " man might have writ all that is in his book, that " never heard one word of any ſuch diſpute.

" There is in the world a great and fierce conteſt " about nature and grace: it would be very hard for " me, if I muſt be brought in as a party on either ſide, " becauſe a diſputant in that controverſy ſhould think " the clear and diſtinct apprehenſions of nature and " grace come not into our minds by theſe ſimple ideas " of ſenſation and reflection. If this be ſo, I may be " reckoned among the objectors againſt all ſorts and " points of orthodoxy, whenever any one pleaſes: I " may be called to account as one heterodox, in the " points of free-grace, free-will, predeſtination, ori- " ginal ſin, juſtification by faith, tranſubſtantiation, the " pope's ſupremacy, and what not? as well as in the " doctrine of the Trinity; and all becauſe they cannot " be furniſhed with clear and diſtinct notions of grace, " free-will, tranſubſtantiation, &c. by ſenſation or reflec- " tion. For in all theſe, as in other points, I do not " ſee but there may be a complaint made, that they " have not always a right underſtanding and clear no- " tions of thoſe things, on which the doctrine they diſ- " pute of depends. And it is not altogether unuſual " for men to talk unintelligibly to themſelves, and " others, in theſe and other points of controverſy, for " want of clear and diſtinct apprehenſions, or (as I " would call them, did not your lordſhip diſlike it) " ideas: for all which unintelligible talking, I do not " think myſelf accountable, though it ſhould ſo fall " out, that my way by ideas would not help them to " what it ſeems is wanting, clear and diſtinct notions. " If my way be ineffectual to that purpoſe, they may, " for all me, make uſe of any other more ſucceſsful; " and leave me out of the controverſy, as one uſeleſs to " either party, for deciding of the queſtion.

" Sup-

" Supposing, as your lordship says, and as you have " undertaken to make appear, that the clear and dis- " tinct apprehensions concerning nature and person, " and the grounds of identity and distinction, should " not come into the mind by simple ideas of sensation " and reflection; what, I beseech your lordship, is this " to the dispute concerning the Trinity, on either side? " And if, after your lordship has endeavoured to give " clear and distinct apprehensions of nature and person, " the disputants in this controversy should still talk " unintelligibly about this point, for want of clear and " distinct apprehensions concerning nature and person; " ought your lordship to be brought in among the par- " tisans on the other side, by any one who writ a Vin- " dication of the Doctrine of the Trinity? In good " earnest, my lord, I do not see how the clear and dis- " tinct notions of nature and person, not coming into " the mind by the simple ideas of sensation and reflec- " tion, any more contains any objection against the " doctrine of the Trinity, than the clear and distinct " apprehensions of original sin, justification, or transub- " stantiation, not coming into the mind by the simple " ideas of sensation and reflection, contains any objec- " tion against the doctrine of original sin, justification, " or transubstantiation: and so of all the rest of the " terms used in any controversy in religion."

All that your lordship answers to this is in these words: " The next thing I undertook to show, was, " that we can have no clear and distinct idea of nature " and person, from sensation or reflection. Here you " spend many pages to show, that this doth not con- " cern you. Let it be so. But it concerns the matter " I was upon; which was to show, that we must have " ideas [I think, my lord, it should be clear and dis- " tinct ideas] of these things, which we cannot come " to by sensation and reflection."

But be that as it will; I have troubled your lordship here with this large repetition out of my former letter, because I think it clearly shows, that my book is no more concerned in the controversy about the Trinity, than any other controversy extant; nor any more oppoſite to that ſide of the queſtion that your lordſhip has endeavoured to defend, than to the contrary: and alſo becauſe, by your lordſhip's anſwer to it in theſe words, "let it be ſo," I thought you had not only agreed to all that I have ſaid, but that by it I had been diſmiſſed out of that controverſy.

It is an obſervation I have ſomewhere met with, "That whoever is once got into the inquiſition, guilty "or not guilty, ſeldom ever gets clear out again." I think your lordſhip is ſatisfied there is no hereſy in my book. The ſuſpicion it was brought into, upon the account of placing certainty only upon clear and diſtinct ideas, is found groundleſs, there being no ſuch thing in my book; and yet it is not diſmiſſed out of the controverſy. It is alleged ſtill, that "my notion of ideas, as "I have ſtated it, may be of dangerous conſequence as "to that article of the chriſtian faith, which your lord-"ſhip has endeavoured to defend;" and ſo I am bound over to another trial. "Clear and diſtinct apprehen-"ſions concerning nature and perſon, and the grounds "of identity and diſtinction, ſo neceſſary in the diſpute "of the Trinity, cannot be had from ſenſation and re-"flection;" was another accuſation. To this, whether true or falſe, I pleaded, that it makes me no party in this diſpute of the Trinity, more than in any diſpute that can ariſe; nor of one ſide of the queſtion more than another. My plea is allowed, "let it be ſo;" and yet nature and perſon are made uſe of again, to hook me into the heretical ſide of the diſpute: and what is now the charge againſt me, in reference to the unitarian controverſy, upon the account of nature and perſon? even this new one, viz. that "if my notions of nature and "perſon hold, your lordſhip does not ſee how it is "poſſible to defend the doctrine of the Trinity." How is this new charge proved? even thus, in theſe words annexed to it: "For if theſe terms really ſignify no-"thing in themſelves, but are only abſtract and com-"plex ideas, which the common uſe of language hath "appropriated to be the ſigns of two ideas; then it is "plain, that they are only notions of the mind, as all "ab-

" abstracted and complex ideas are; and so one nature " and three persons can be no more."

My lord, I am not so conceited of my notions, as to think that they deserve that your lordship should dwell long upon the consideration of them. But pardon me, my lord, if I say, that it seems to me that this representation which your lordship here makes to yourself, of my notions of nature and person, and the inference from it, were made a little in haste: and that if it had not been so, your lordship would not, from the preceding words, have drawn this conclusion; " and so one nature " and three persons can be no more;" nor charged it upon me.

For as to that part of your lordship's representation of my notions of nature and person, wherein it is said, " if these terms in themselves signify nothing;" though I grant that to be my notion of the terms nature and person, that they are two sounds that naturally signify not one thing more than another, nor in themselves signify any thing at all, but have the signification which they have, barely by imposition: yet, in this my notion of them, give me leave to presume, that upon more leisurely thoughts I shall have your lordship, as well as the rest of mankind that ever thought of this matter, concurring with me. So that if your lordship continues positive in it, " that you cannot see how it is possible " to defend the doctrine of the Trinity, if this my no- " tion of nature and person hold;" I, as far as my eye-sight will reach in the case (which possibly is but a little way) cannot see, but it will be plain to all mankind, that your lordship gives up the doctrine of the Trinity: since this notion of nature and person that they are two words that signify by imposition, is what will hold in the common sense of all mankind. And then, my lord, all those who think well of your lordship's ability to defend it, and believe that you see as far in that question as any body (which I take to be the common sentiment of all the learned world, especially of those of our country and church) will be in great danger to have an ill opinion of the evidence of that article: since, I imagine, there is scarce one of them, who does not think this notion notion will hold, viz. that theſe terms nature and perſon ſignify what they do ſignify by impoſition, and not by nature.

Though, if the contrary were true, that theſe two words, nature and perſon, had this particular privilege, above other names of things, that they did naturally and in themſelves ſignify what they do ſignify, and that they received not their ſignifications from the arbitrary impoſition of men, I do not ſee how the defence of the doctrine of the Trinity ſhould depend hereon; unleſs your lordſhip concludes, that it is neceſſary to the defence of the doctrine of the Trinity, that, theſe two articulate ſounds ſhould have natural ſignifications; and that unleſs they are uſed in thoſe ſignifications, it were impoſſible to defend the doctrine of the Trinity. Which is in effect to ſay, that where theſe two words are not in uſe and in their natural ſignification, the doctrine of the Trinity cannot be defended. And if this be ſo, I grant your lordſhip had reaſon to ſay, that if it hold, that the terms nature and perſon ſignify by impoſition, your lordſhip does not ſee how it is poſſible to defend the doctrine of the Trinity. But then, my lord, I beg your lordſhip to conſider, whether this be not mightily to prejudice that doctrine, and to undermine the belief of that article of faith, to make ſo extraordinary a ſuppoſition neceſſary to the defence of it; and of more dangerous conſequence to it, than any thing your lordſhip can imagine deducible from my book?

As to the remaining part of what your lordſhip has, in the foregoing paſſage, ſet down as ſome of my notions of nature and perſon, viz. that theſe terms are only abſtract or complex ideas: I crave leave to plead, that I never ſaid any ſuch thing; and I ſhould be aſhamed if I ever had ſaid, that theſe, or any other terms, were ideas: which is all one as to ſay, that the ſign is the thing ſignified. Much leſs did I ever ſay, "That theſe terms "are only abſtract and complex ideas, which the com-"mon uſe of language hath appropriated to be the ſigns "of two ideas." For to ſay, "that the common uſe of "language has appropriated abſtract and complex ideas "to be the ſigns of ideas," ſeems to me ſo extraordinary a way of talking, that I can ſcarce perſuade myſelf it would would be of credit to your lordship, to think it worth your while to answer a man, whom you could suppose to vent such gross jargon.

This therefore containing none of my notions of nature and person, nor indeed any thing that I understand; whether your lordship rightly deduces from it this consequence, viz. "and so one nature and three persons can "be no more;" is what I neither know nor am concerned to examine.

Your lordship has been pleased to take my Essay of Human Understanding to task, in your Vindication of the doctrine of the Trinity: because the doctrine of it will not furnish your lordship "with clear and distinct "apprehensions concerning nature and person, and the "grounds of identity and distinction. For, says your "lordship, we must talk unintelligibly about this point "[of the Trinity] unless we have clear and distinct ap-"prehensions of nature and person," &c.

Whether, by my way of ideas, one can have clear and distinct apprehensions of nature and person, I shall not now dispute, how much soever I am of the mind one may. Nor shall I question the reasonableness of this principle your lordship goes upon, viz. that my book is to be disputed against, as opposite to the doctrine of the Trinity, because it fails to furnish your lordship "with clear and distinct apprehensions of nature and "person, and the distinction between them;" though I promised no such clear and distinct apprehensions, nor have treated in my book any where of nature at all. But upon this occasion I cannot but observe, that your lordship yourself, in that place, makes "clear and dis-"tinct ideas necessary to that certainty of faith," which your lordship thinks requisite, though it be that very thing for which you blame the men of the new way of reasoning, and is the very ground of your disputing against the unitarians, the author of Christianity not mysterious, and me, jointly under that title.

Your lordship, to supply that defect in my book, of clear and distinct apprehensions of nature and person, for the vindication of the doctrine of the Trinity, without which it cannot be talked of intelligibly nor defended, undertook to clear the distinction between nature ture and perſon. This, I told your lordſhip, gave me hopes of getting farther inſight into theſe matters, and more clear and diſtinct apprehenſions concerning nature and perſon, than was to be had by ideas; but that after all the attention and application I could uſe, in reading what your lordſhip had writ of it, I found myſelf ſo little enlightened concerning nature and perſon, by what your lordſhip had ſaid, that I found no other remedy, but that I muſt be content with the condemned way by ideas.

This, which I thought not only an innocent, but a reſpectful anſwer, to what your lordſhip had ſaid about nature and perſon, has drawn upon me a more ſevere reflection than I thought it deſerved. Scepticiſm is a pretty hard word, which I find dropt in more places than one; but I ſhall refer the conſideration of that to another place. All that I ſhall do now, ſhall be to mark out (ſince your lordſhip forces me to it) more particularly than I did before, what I think very hard to be underſtood, in that which your lordſhip has ſaid to clear the diſtinction between nature and perſon; which I ſhall do, for theſe two ends:

Firſt, as an excuſe for my ſaying, "that I had learnt "nothing out of your lordſhip's elaborate diſcourſe of "them, but this; that I muſt content myſelf with my "condemned way by ideas."

And next to ſhow, why not only I, but ſeveral others, think that if my book deſerved to be brought in, and taken notice of among the anti-trinitarian writers, for want of clear and diſtinct ideas of nature and perſon; what your lordſhip has ſaid upon theſe ſubjects will more juſtly deſerve, by him that writes next in defence of the doctrine of the Trinity, to be brought in among the oppoſers of the doctrine of the Trinity, as of dangerous conſequence to it; for want of giving clear and diſtinct apprehenſions of nature and perſon; unleſs the ſame thing ranks one man among the unitarians, and another amongſt the trinitarians.

What your lordſhip had ſaid, for clearing of the diſtinction of nature and perſon, having ſurpaſſed my underſtanding, as I told your lordſhip in my former letter;

I was

I was resolved not to incur your lordship's displeasure a second time, by confessing I found not myself enlightened by it, till I had taken all the help I could imagine, to find out these clear and distinct apprehensions of nature and person, which your lordship had so much declared for. To this purpose, I consulted others upon what you had said; and desired to find somebody, who, understanding it himself, would help me out, where my own application and endeavours had been used to no purpose. But my misfortune has been, my lord, that among several whom I have desired to tell me their sense of what your lordship has said, for clearing the notions of nature and person, there has not been one who owned, that he understood your lordship's meaning; but confessed, the farther he looked into what your lordship had there said about nature and person, the more he was at a loss about them.

One said, your lordship began with giving two significations of the word nature. One of them, as it stood for properties, he said he understood: but the other, wherein "nature was taken for the thing itself, wherein "those properties were," he said, he did not understand. But that, he added, I was not to wonder at, in a man who was not very well acquainted with Greek; and therefore might well be allowed not to have learning enough not to understand an English word, that Aristotle was brought to explain and settle the sense of. Besides, he added, that which puzzled him the more in it, was the very explication which was brought of it out of Aristotle, viz. that "nature was a corporeal sub-"stance, which had the principles of motion in itself;" because he could not conceive a corporeal substance, having the principles of motion in itself. And if nature were a corporeal substance, having the principles of motion in itself; it must be good sense to say, that a corporeal substance, or, which is the same thing, a body having the principles of motion in itself, is nature; which he confessed, if any body should say to him, he could not understand.

Another thing, he said, that perplexed him in this explication of nature, was, that if "nature was a cor-

" poreal ſubſtance, which had the principles of motion " in itſelf," he thought it might happen that there might be no nature at all. For corporeal ſubſtances having all equally principles, or no principles of motion in themſelves; and all men who do not make matter and motion eternal, being poſitive in it, that a body, at reſt, has no principle of motion in it; muſt conclude, that corporeal ſubſtance has no principle of motion in itſelf: from hence it will follow, that to all thoſe who admit not matter and motion to be eternal, no nature, in that ſenſe, will be left at all, ſince nature is ſaid to be a corporeal ſubſtance, which hath the principles of motion in itſelf; but ſuch a ſort of corporeal ſubſtance thoſe men have no notion of at all, and conſequently none of nature, which is ſuch a corporeal ſubſtance.

Now, ſaid he, if this be that clear and diſtinct apprehenſion of nature, which is ſo neceſſary to the doctrine of the Trinity; they who have found it out for that purpoſe, and find it clear and diſtinct, have reaſon to be ſatisfied with it upon that account: but how they will reconcile it to the creation of matter, I cannot tell. I, for my part, ſaid he, can make it conſiſt neither with the creation of the world, nor with any other notions; and ſo, plainly, cannot underſtand it.

He farther ſaid, in the following words, which are theſe, " but nature and ſubſtance are of an equal extent; " and ſo that which is the ſubject of powers and pro- " perties is nature, whether it be meant of bodily " or ſpiritual ſubſtances;" he neither underſtood the connexion nor ſenſe. Firſt, he underſtood not, he ſaid, that " nature and ſubſtance were of the ſame extent." Nature, he ſaid, in his notion of it, extended to things that were not ſubſtances; as he thought it might properly be ſaid, the nature of a rectangular triangle was, that the ſquare of the hypothenuſe was equal to the ſquare of the two other ſides; or, it is the nature of ſin to offend God: though it be certain, that neither ſin nor a rectangular triangle, to which nature is attributed in theſe propoſitions, are either of them ſubſtances.

Farther, he ſaid, that he did not ſee how the particle " but" connects this to the preceding words. But leaſt least of all, could he comprehend the inference from hence: "and so that which is the subject of powers and "properties is nature, whether it be meant of bodily or "spiritual substances." Which deduction, said he, stands thus: "Aristotle takes nature for a corporeal "substance, which has the principle of motion in itself; "therefore nature and substance are of an equal extent, "and so both corporeal and incorporeal substances are "nature." This is the very connexion, said he, of the whole deduction in the foregoing words; which I understand not, if I understand the words: and if I understand not the words, I am yet farther from understanding any thing of this explication of nature, whereby we are to come to clear and distinct apprehensions of it.

Methinks, said he, going on, I understand how by making nature and substance one and the same thing, that may serve to bring substance into this dispute; but for all that, I cannot, for my life, understand nature to be substance, nor substance to be nature.

There is another inference, said he, in the close of this paragraph, which both for its connexion and expression seems, to me, very hard to be understood, it being set down in these words: "so that the nature of "things properly belongs to our reason, and not to "mere ideas." For when a man knows what it is for the nature of things properly to belong to reason, and not to mere ideas, there will, I guess, some difficulty remain, in what sense soever he shall understand that expression, to deduce this proposition as an inference from the foregoing words, which are these: "I grant, "that by sensation and reflection, we come to know "the powers and properties of things; but our reason "is satisfied that there must be something beyond those, "because it is impossible that they should subsist by "themselves: so that the nature of things properly be-"longs to our reason, and not to mere ideas."

It is true, said I; but his lordship, upon my taking reason in that place for the power of reasoning, hath, in his answer, with a little kind of warmth, corrected my mistake, in these words: "still you are at it, that you "can find no opposition between ideas and reason: but

"ideas

" ideas are objects of the understanding, and the under" standing is one of the faculties employed about them."
" No doubt of it. But you might easily see that by " reason, I understood principles of reason, allowed by " mankind; which, I think, are very different from " ideas. But I perceive reason, in this sense, is a thing
" you have no idea of; or one as obscure as that of sub" stance."

I imagine, said the gentleman, that if his lordship should be asked, how he perceives you have no idea of reason in that sense, or one as obscure as that of substance? he would scarce have a reason ready to give for his saying so: and what we say which reason cannot account for, must be ascribed to some other cause.

Now truly, said I, my mistake was so innocent and so unaffected, that if I had had these very words said to me then, which his lordship sounds in my ears now, to awaken my understanding, viz. " that the principles of " reason are very different from ideas;" I do not yet find how they would have helped me to see what, it seems, was no small fault, that I did not see before. Because, let reason, taken for principles of reason, be as different as it will from ideas; reason, taken as a faculty, is as different from them, in my apprehension: and in both senses of the word reason, either as taken for a faculty, or for the principles of reason allowed by mankind, reason and ideas may consist together.

Certainly, said the gentleman, ideas have something in them, that you do not see; or else such a small mistake, as you made in endeavouring to make them consistent with reason as a faculty, would not have moved so great a man as my lord bishop of Worcester so as to make him tell you, " that reason, taken for the common " principles of reason, is a thing whereof you have no
" ideas, or one as obscure as that of substance." For, if I mistake not, you have in your book, in more places than one, spoke, and that pretty largely, of self-evident propositions and maxims: so that, if his lordship has ever read those parts of your Essay, he cannot doubt, but that you have ideas of those common principles of reason.

It

It may be ſo, I replied, but ſuch things are to be borne from great men, who often uſe them as marks of diſtinction: though I ſhould leſs expect them from my lord biſhop of Worceſter than from almoſt any one; becauſe he has the ſolid and interior greatneſs of learning, as well as that of outward title and dignity. But ſince he expects it from me, I will do what I can to ſee what, he ſays, is his meaning here by reaſon. I will repeat it juſt as his lordſhip ſays, "I might eaſily have "ſeen what he underſtood by it." My lord's words immediately following thoſe above taken notice of, are: "and ſo that which is the ſubject of powers and proper-"ties is the nature, whether it be meant of bodily or "ſpiritual ſubſtances." And then follow theſe, which to be rightly underſtood, his lordſhip ſays muſt be read thus: "I grant, that by ſenſation and reflection we "come to know the properties of things; but our rea-"ſon, i. e. the principles of reaſon allowed by man-"kind, are ſatisfied that there muſt be ſomething be-"yond theſe, becauſe it is impoſſible they ſhould ſub-"ſiſt by themſelves: ſo that the nature of things pro-"perly belongs to our reaſon, i. e. to the principles of "reaſon allowed by mankind; and not to mere ideas." This explication of it, replied the gentleman, which my lord biſhop has given of this paſſage, makes it more unintelligible to me than it was before; and I know him to be ſo great a maſter of ſenſe, that I doubt whether he himſelf will be better ſatisfied with this ſenſe of his words, than with that which you underſtood it in. But let us go on to the two next paragraphs, wherein his lordſhip is at farther pains to give us clear and diſtinct apprehenſions of nature: and that we may not miſtake let us firſt read his words, which run thus:

"But we muſt yet proceed farther; for nature may "be conſidered two ways:"

1. "As it is in diſtinct individuals; as the nature of "a man is equally in Peter, James, and John; and this "is the common nature, with a particular ſubſiſtence, "proper to each of them. For the nature of a man, as "in Peter, is diſtinct from that ſame nature, as it is in "James and John; otherwiſe they would be but one

" perſon, as well as have the ſame nature. And this " diſtinction of perſons in them is diſcerned both by " our ſenſes, as to their different accidents; and by our " reaſon, becauſe they have a ſeparate exiſtence; not " coming into it at once, and in the ſame manner."

2. " Nature may be conſidered abſtractly, without " reſpect to individual perſons; and then it makes an " entire notion of itſelf. For, however the ſame nature " may be in different individuals, yet the nature in itſelf " remains one and the ſame; which appears from this " evident reaſon, that otherwiſe every individual muſt " make a different kind."

In theſe words, ſaid he, having read them, I find the ſame difficulties you took notice of in your letter. As firſt, that it is not declared whether his lordſhip ſpeaks here of nature, as ſtanding for eſſential properties, or of nature, ſtanding for ſubſtance; which dubiouſneſs caſts an obſcurity on the whole place. And next, I can no more tell than you, whether it be his lordſhip's opinion that I ought to think, that one and the ſame nature is in Peter and John; or, that a nature, diſtinct from that in John, is in Peter; and that for the ſame reaſon which left you at a loſs, viz. becauſe I cannot put together one and the ſame and diſtinct. But ſince his lordſhip, in his anſwer to you, has ſaid nothing to give us light in theſe matters, we muſt be content to be in the dark; and if he has not thought fit to explain it, ſo as to make himſelf to be underſtood by us, we may be ſure he has a reaſon for it. But pray tell me, did you underſtand the reſt of theſe two paragraphs that you mentioned, only thoſe two difficulties? For I muſt profeſs to you, that I underſtand ſo little of either of them, that they contribute nothing at all to give me thoſe clear and diſtinct apprehenſions of nature and perſon, which I find, by his lordſhip, it is neceſſary to have, before one can have a right underſtanding of the doctrine of the Trinity. Nay, I am ſo far from gaining by his lordſhip's diſcourſe thoſe clear and diſtinct apprehenſions of nature and perſon, that what he objects to your new method of certainty, I found verified in this his clearing the distinction between nature and person, that it left me in more doubt than I was in before.

diſ-

Truly, sir, replied I, that was just my case; but minding then only what I thought immediately related to the objections to my book, which followed; I passed by what I might have retorted concerning the obscurity and difficulty in his lordship's doctrine about nature and person, and contented myself to tell his lordship, in as respectful terms as I could find, that I could not understand him: which drew from him that severe reflection, that I obstinately stick to a way that leads to scepticism, which is the way of ideas. But now that, for the vindication of my book, I am showing that his lordship's way, without ideas, does as little (I will not say less) furnish us with clear and distinct apprehensions concerning nature and person, as my Essay does; I do not see but that his lordship's Vindication of the Trinity, is as much against the doctrine of the Trinity, as my Essay of Human Understanding; and may, with as much reason on that account, be animadverted on by another, who vindicates the doctrine of the Trinity, as my book is by his lordship.

Indeed, said he, if failing of clear and distinct apprehensions, concerning nature and person, render any book obnoxious to one that vindicates the doctrine of the Trinity, and gives him sufficient cause to write against it, as opposite to that doctrine; I know no book of more dangerous consequence to that article of faith, nor more necessary to be writ against by a defender of that article, than that part of his lordship's Vindication, which we are now upon. For to my thinking, I never met with any thing more unintelligible about that subject, nor that is more remote from clear and distinct apprehensions of nature and person. For what more effectual method could there be to confound the notions of nature and person, instead of clearing their distinction, than to discourse of them without first defining them? Is this a way to give clear and distinct apprehensions of two words, upon a right understanding of which, all our notions of the doctrine of the Trinity depend; and without which, we muſt talk unintelligibly about that point?

His lordſhip tells us here, nature may be conſidered two ways. What is it the nearer to be told, nature may be conſidered two or twenty ways, till we know what that is which is to be conſidered two ways? i. e. till he defines the term nature, that we may know what preciſely is the thing meant by it.

He tells us, "nature may be conſidered,

"1. As it is in individuals.

"2. Abſtractly."

1. His lordſhip ſays, "nature may be conſidered, as "in diſtinct individuals." It is true, by thoſe that know what nature is. But his lordſhip having not yet told me what nature is, nor what he here means by it; it is impoſſible for me to conſider nature in or out of individuals, unleſs I can conſider I know not what: ſo that this conſideration is, to me, as good as no conſideration; neither does or can it help at all to any clear and diſtinct apprehenſions of nature. Indeed he ſays, Ariſtotle by nature ſignified a corporeal ſubſtance; and from thence his lordſhip takes occaſion to ſay, "that "nature and ſubſtance are of an equal extent:" though Ariſtotle, taking nature for a corporeal ſubſtance, gave no ground for ſuch a ſaying, becauſe corporeal ſubſtance and ſubſtance are not of an equal extent. But to paſs by that: if his lordſhip would have us underſtand here, that by nature he means ſubſtance, this is but ſubſtituting one name in the place of another; and, which is worſe, a more doubtful and obſcure term, in the place of one that is leſs ſo; which will, I fear, not give us very clear and diſtinct apprehenſions of nature. His lordſhip goes on:

"As the nature of a man is equally in Peter, James, "and John; and this is the common nature, with a "particular ſubſiſtence proper to each of them."

Here his lordſhip does not tell us what conſideration of nature there may be, but actually affirms and teaches ſomething. I wiſh I had the capacity to learn by it the clear and diſtinct apprehenſions of nature and perſon, which is the leſſon he is here upon. He ſays, "that "the

" the nature of a man is equally in Peter, James, and " John." That is more than I know: becauſe I do not know what things Peter, James, and John are. They may be drills, or horſes, for aught I know; as well as Weweena, Cuchipe, and Couſheda, may be drills, as his lordſhip ſays, for aught he knows. For I know no law of ſpeech that more neceſſarily makes theſe three ſounds, Peter, James, and John, ſtand for three men; than Weweena, Cuchipe, and Couſheda, ſtand for three men: for I knew a horſe that was called Peter; and I do not know but the maſter of the ſame team might call other of his horſes James and John. Indeed if Peter, James, and John, are ſuppoſed to be the names only of men, it cannot be queſtioned but the nature of man is equally in them; unleſs one can ſuppoſe each of them to be a man, without having the nature of a man in him: that is, ſuppoſe him to be a man, without being a man. But then this to me, I confeſs, gives no manner of clear or diſtinct apprehenſions concerning nature in general, or the nature of man in particular; it ſeeming to me to ſay no more but this, that a man is a man, and a drill is a drill, and a horſe is a horſe: or, which is all one, what has the nature of a man, has the nature of a man, or is a man; and what has the nature of a drill, has the nature of a drill, or is a drill; and what has the nature of a horſe, has the nature of a horſe, or is a horſe; whether it be called Peter, or not called Peter. But if any one ſhould repeat this a thouſand times to me, and go over all the ſpecies of creatures, with ſuch an unqueſtionable aſſertion to every one of them; I do not find, that thereby I ſhould get one jot clearer or diſtincter apprehenſions either of nature in general, or of the nature of a man, a horſe, or a drill, &c. in particular.

His lordſhip adds, " and this is the common nature, " with a particular ſubſiſtence, proper to each of them." I do not doubt but his lordſhip ſet down theſe words with a very good meaning; but ſuch is my misfortune, that I, for my life, cannot find it out. I have repeated " and this" twenty times to myſelf; and my weak underſtanding always rejolts, and what? To which I am always ready to anſwer, the nature of a man in Peter, and the nature of a man in James, and the nature of a man in John, is the common nature; and there I ſtop, and can go no farther to make it coherent to myſelf, till I add of man; and then it muſt be read thus; "the "nature of man in Peter is the common nature of man, "with a particular ſubſiſtence proper to Peter." That the nature of man in Peter, is the nature of a man, if Peter be ſuppoſed to be a man, I certainly know, let the nature of man be what it will, of which I yet know nothing: but if Peter be not ſuppoſed to be the name of a man, but be the name of a horſe, all that knowledge vaniſhes, and I know nothing. But let Peter be ever ſo much a man, and let it be impoſſible to give that name to a horſe, yet I cannot underſtand theſe words, that the common nature of man is in Peter; for whatſoever is in Peter, exiſts in Peter; and whatever exiſts in Peter, is particular: but the common nature of man, is the general nature of man, or elſe I underſtand not what is meant by common nature. And it confounds my underſtanding, to make a general a particular.

But to help me to conceive this matter, I am told, "it is the common nature with a particular ſubſiſtence "proper to Peter." But this helps not my underſtanding in the caſe: for firſt, I do not underſtand what ſubſiſtence is, if it ſignify any thing different from exiſtence; and if it be the ſame with exiſtence, then it is ſo far from looſening the knot, that it leaves it juſt as it was, only covered with the obſcure and leſs known term, ſubſiſtence. For the difficulty to me, is, to conceive an univerſal nature, or univerſal any thing, to exiſt; which would be, in my mind, to make an univerſal a particular: which, to me, is impoſſible.

No, ſaid another who was by, it is but uſing the word ſubſiſtence inſtead of exiſtence, and there is nothing eaſier; if one will conſider this common or univerſal nature, with a particular exiſtence, under the name of ſubſiſtence, the buſineſs is done.

Juſt as eaſy, replied the former, I find it in myſelf, as to conſider the nature of a circle with four angles; for to conſider a circle with four angles, is no more impoſſible to me, than to conſider an univerſal with a particular exiſt-existence; which is to consider an universal really existing, and in effect a particular. But the words, "proper "to each of them," follow to help me out. I hoped so, till I considered them; and then I found I understood them as little as all the rest. For I know not what is a subsistence proper to Peter, more than to James or John, till I know Peter himself; and then indeed my senses will discern him from James or John, or any man living.

His lordship goes on: "for the nature of man, as in "Peter, is distinct from that same nature as it is in "James and John; otherwise they would be but one "person, as well as have the same nature." These words, by the casual particle for, which introduces them, should be a proof of something that goes before: but what they are meant for a proof of, I confess I understand not. For the proposition preceding, as far as I can make any thing of it, is this, that the general nature of a man has a particular existence in each of the three, Peter, James, and John. But then how the saying, that "the nature of man, as in Peter, is distinct "from the same nature as it is in James and John," does prove that the general nature of man does or can exist in either of them, I cannot see.

The words which follow, "otherwise they would be "one person, as well as have the same nature," I see the connexion of; for it is visible they were brought to prove, that the nature in Peter is distinct from the nature in James and John. But with all that, I do not see of what use or significancy they are here: because, to me, they are more obscure and doubtful, than the proposition they are brought to prove. For I scarce think there can be a clearer proposition than this, viz. that three natures, that have three distinct existences in three men, are, as his lordship says, three distinct natures, and so needs no proof. But to prove it by this, that "other-"wise they could not be three persons," is to prove it by a proposition unintelligible to me; because his lordship has not yet told me, what the clear and distinct apprehension of person is, which I ought to have. For his lordship supposing it, as he does, to be a term, which has in itſelf a certain ſignification; I, who have no ſuch conception of it, ſhould in vain look for it in the propriety of our language, which is eſtabliſhed upon arbitrary impoſition; and ſo can, by no means, imagine what perſon here ſignifies, till his lordſhip ſhall do me the favour to tell me.

To this I replied, that ſix pages farther on, your lordſhip explains the notion of perſon.

To which the gentleman anſwered, whether I can get clear and diſtinct apprehenſions of perſon, by what his lordſhip ſays there of perſon, I ſhall ſee when I come to it. But this, in the mean time, muſt be confeſſed, that perſon comes in here ſix pages too ſoon, for thoſe who want his lordſhip's explication of it, to make them have clear and diſtinct apprehenſions of what he means, when he uſes it.

For we muſt certainly talk unintelligibly about nature and perſon, as well as about the doctrine of the Trinity, unleſs we have clear and diſtinct apprehenſions concerning nature and perſon; as his lordſhip ſays, in the foregoing page.

It follows, "and this diſtinction of perſons in them, "is diſcerned both by our ſenſes, as to their different "accidents; and by our reaſon, becauſe they have a "ſeparate exiſtence; not coming into it at once and in "the ſame manner."

Theſe words, ſaid he, which conclude this paragraph, tell us how perſons are diſtinguiſhed; but, as far as I can ſee, ſerve not at all to give us any clear and diſtinct apprehenſions of nature, by conſidering it in diſtinct individuals: which was the buſineſs of this paragraph.

His lordſhip ſays, we may conſider nature as in diſtinct individuals: and ſo I do as much, when I conſider it in three diſtinct phyſical atoms or particles of the air or æther, as when I conſider it in Peter, James, and John. For three diſtinct phyſical atoms are three diſtinct individuals, and have three diſtinct natures in them, as certainly as three diſtinct men; though I cannot diſcern the diſtinction between them by my ſenſes, as to their different accidents; nor is their ſeparate exiſtence diſcernible to my reaſon, by their not coming into it at once once and in the ſame manner: for they did, for aught I know, or at leaſt might, come into exiſtence at once and in the ſame manner, which was by creation. I think it will be allowed, that God did, or might, create more than one phyſical atom of matter at once: ſo that here nature may be conſidered in diſtinct individuals, without any of thoſe ways of diſtinction which his lordſhip here ſpeaks of: and ſo I cannot ſee how theſe laſt words contribute aught, to give us clear and diſtinct apprehenſions of nature, by conſidering nature in diſtinct individuals.

But to try what clear and diſtinct apprehenſions concerning nature, his lordſhip's way of conſidering nature in this paragraph carries in it; let me repeat his lordſhip's diſcourſe to you here, only changing one common nature for another, viz. putting the common nature of animal, for the common nature of man, which his lordſhip has choſe to inſtance in; and then his lordſhip's words would run thus: "nature may be conſidered two "ways; firſt, as it is in diſtinct individuals; as the na-"ture of an animal is equally in Alexander, Bucepha-"lus, and Podargus: and this is the common nature, "with a particular ſubſiſtence, proper to each of them. "For the nature of animal, as in Bucephalus, is diſtinct "from the ſame nature as in Podargus and Alexander; "otherwiſe they would be but one perſon, as well as "have the ſame nature. And this diſtinction of per-"ſons in them is diſcerned both by our ſenſes, as to "their different accidents; and by our reaſon, becauſe "they have a ſeparate exiſtence, not coming into it at "once and in the ſame manner."

To this I ſaid, I thought he did violence to your lordſhip's ſenſe, in applying the word perſon, which ſignifies an intelligent individual, to Bucephalus and Podargus, which were two irrational animals.

To which the gentleman replied, that he fell into this miſtake, by his thinking your lordſhip had ſomewhere ſpoken, as if an individual intelligent ſubſtance were not the proper definition of perſon. But, continued he, I lay no ſtreſs on the word perſon, in the inſtance wherein I have uſed his lordſhip's words, and therefore, if you pleaſe, put individual for it; and then reading it ſo, let me aſk you whether that way of conſidering it contributes any thing to the giving you clear and diſtinct apprehenſions of nature? which it ought to do, if his lordſhip's way of conſidering nature, in that paragraph, were of any uſe to that purpoſe: ſince the common nature of animal is as much the ſame; or, as his lordſhip ſays in the next paragraph, as much an entire notion of itſelf, as the common nature of man. And the common nature of animal is as equally in Alexander, Bucephalus, and Podargus, with a particular ſubſiſtence proper to each of them; as the common nature of man is equally in Peter, James, and John, with a particular ſubſiſtence to each of them, &c. But pray what does all this do towards the giving you clear and diſtinct apprehenſions of nature?

me

I replied, truly neither the conſideration of nature, as in his lordſhip's diſtinct individuals, viz. in Peter, James, and John; nor the conſideration of nature, as in your diſtinct individuals, viz. in Alexander, Bucephalus, and Podargus; did any thing towards the giving me clear and diſtinct apprehenſions of nature. Nay, they were ſo far from it, that, after having gone over both the one and the other ſeveral times in my thoughts, I ſeem to have leſs clear and diſtinct apprehenſions of nature, than I had before. But whether it will be ſo with other people, as I perceive it is with you, and me, and ſome others, none of the dulleſt, whom I have talked with upon this ſubject, that muſt be left to experience; and if there be others that do hereby get ſuch clear and diſtinct apprehenſions concerning nature, which may help them in their notions of the Trinity, that cannot be denied them.

That is true, ſaid he: but if that be ſo, I muſt neceſſarily conclude, that the notioniſts and the ideiſts have their apprehenſive faculties very differently turned; ſince in their explaining themſelves (which they on both ſides think clear and intelligible) they cannot underſtand one another.

But let us go on to nature, conſidered abſtractly, in the next words.

Secondly,

Secondly, nature may be considered, says his lordship, abstractly, without respect to individual persons.

I do not see, said he, what persons do here, more than any other individuals. For nature, considered abstractly, has no more respect to persons, than any other sort of individuals.

And then, says his lordship, it makes an entire notion of itself. To make an entire notion of itself, being an expression I never met with before, I shall not, I think, be much blamed if I be not confident, that I perfectly understand it. To guess therefore, as well as I can, what can be meant by it, I consider, that whatever the mind makes an object of its contemplation at any time, may be called one notion, or, as you perhaps will call it, one idea; which may be an entire notion or idea, though it be but the half of what is the object of the mind at another time. For methinks the number five is as much an entire notion of itself, when the mind contemplates the number five by itself; as the number ten is an entire notion by itself, when the mind contemplates that alone and its properties: and in this sense I can understand an entire notion by itself. But if it mean any thing else, I confess I do not understand it. But then the difficulty remains; for I cannot see how in this sense, nature abstractly considered makes an entire notion, more than the nature of Peter makes an entire notion. For if the nature in Peter be considered by itself, or if the abstract nature of man be considered by itself, or if the nature of animal (which is yet more abstract) be considered by itself; every one of these being made the whole object, that the mind at any time contemplates, seems, to me, as much an entire notion as either of the other.

But farther, what the calling nature, abstractly considered, an entire notion in itself, contributes to our having or not having clear and distinct apprehensions of nature, is yet more remote from my comprehension.

His lordship's next words are; "for however the "same nature may be in different individuals, yet the "nature in itself remains one and the same: which ap-

"pears

" pears from this evident reaſon, that otherwiſe every " individual muſt make a different kind."

The coherence of which diſcourſe, continued he, tending, as it ſeems, to prove, that nature, conſidered abſtractly, makes an entire notion of itſelf; ſtands, as far as I can comprehend it, thus: " becauſe every indivi- " dual muſt not make a different kind; therefore nature, " however it be in different individuals, yet in itſelf it " remains one and the ſame. And becauſe nature, " however it be in different individuals, yet in itſelf " remains one and the ſame; therefore, conſidered ab- " ſtractly, it makes an entire notion of itſelf." This is the argument of this paragraph; and the connexion of it, if I underſtand the connecting words, " for, and " from this evident reaſon." But if they are uſed for any thing elſe but to tie thoſe propoſitions together, as the proofs one of another, in that way I have mentioned; I confeſs, I underſtand them not, nor any thing that is meant by this whole paragraph. And in that ſenſe I underſtand it in, what it does towards the giving us clear and diſtinct apprehenſions of nature, I muſt confeſs, I do not ſee at all.

Thus far, ſaid he, we have conſidered his lordſhip's explication of nature; and my underſtanding what his lordſhip has diſcourſed upon it, under ſeveral heads, for the giving us clear and diſtinct apprehenſions concerning it.

Let us now read what his lordſhip has ſaid concerning perſon; that I may, ſince you deſire it of me, let you ſee how far I have got any clear and diſtinct apprehenſion of perſon, from his lordſhip's explication of that. His lordſhip's words are; " let us now come to " the idea of a perſon. For although the common na- " ture of mankind be the ſame, yet we ſee a difference " in the ſeveral individuals from one another: ſo that " Peter, and James, and John, are all of the ſame " kind; yet Peter is not James, and James is not John. " But what is this diſtinction founded upon? they may " be diſtinguiſhed from each other by our ſenſes, as to " difference of features, diſtance of place, &c. but that " is not all; for ſuppoſing there were no external dif" ference,

" ference, yet there is a difference between them, as " several individuals in the same common nature. And " here lies the true idea of a person, which arises from " the manner of subsistence, which is in one individual, " and is not communicable to another. An individual " intelligent substance is rather supposed to the making " of a person, than the proper definition of it; for a " person relates to something which doth distinguish it " from another intelligent substance in the same nature; " and therefore the foundation of it lies in the peculiar " manner of subsistence, which agrees to one, and to " none else, of the same kind; and this it is which is " called personality."

In these words, this I understand very well, that supposing Peter, James, and John to be all three men; and man being a name for one kind of animals; they are all of the same kind. I understand too very well, that Peter is not James, and James is not John, but that there is a difference in these several individuals. I understand also, that that they may be distinguished from each other by our senses, as to different features and distance of place, &c. But what follows, I do confess, I do not understand, where his lordship says, " but that is not all; " for supposing there were no such external difference, " yet there is a difference between them, as several in- " dividuals in the same nature." For first, whatever willingness I have to gratify his lordship in whatever he would have me suppose, yet I cannot, I find, suppose, that there is no such external difference between Peter and James, as difference of place; for I cannot suppose a contradiction: and it seems to me to imply a contradiction to say, Peter and James are not in different places. The next thing I do not understand, is what his lordship says in these words: " for supposing there " were no such external difference, yet there is a dif- " ference between them, as several individuals in the " same nature." For these words being here to show what the distinction of Peter, James, and John, is founded upon, I do not understand how they at all do it.

His lordship says, " Peter is not James, and James " is not John." He then asks, " but what is this dis- " tinction

" tinction founded upon?" And to reſolve that, he anſwers, " not by difference of features, or diſtance of " place," with an &c. becauſe, " ſuppoſing there were " no ſuch external difference, yet there is a differ- " ence between them." In which paſſage, by theſe words, ſuch external difference, muſt be meant all other difference but what his lordſhip, in the next words, is going to name; or elſe I do not ſee how his lordſhip ſhows what this diſtinction is founded upon. For if, ſuppoſing ſuch external differences away, there may be other differences on which to found their diſtinction, beſides that other which his lordſhip ſubjoins, viz. " the difference that is between them, as ſeveral " individuals in the ſame nature." I cannot ſee that his lordſhip has ſaid any thing to ſhow what the diſtinction between thoſe individuals is founded on; becauſe if he has not, under the terms external difference, comprized all the differences beſides that his chief and fundamental one, viz. " the difference between them as " ſeveral individuals, in the ſame common nature;" it may be founded on what his lordſhip has not mentioned. I conclude then it is his lordſhip's meaning, (or elſe I can ſee no meaning in his words) that ſuppoſing no difference between them, of features or diſtance of place, &c. i. e. no other difference between them, yet there would be ſtill the true ground of diſtinction, in the difference between them, as ſeveral individuals in the ſame common nature.

Let us then underſtand, if we can, what is the difference between things, barely as ſeveral individuals in the ſame common nature, all other differences laid aſide.

Truly, ſaid I, that I cannot conceive.

Nor I neither, replied the gentleman: for conſidering them as ſeveral individuals, was what his lordſhip did, when he ſaid, Peter was not James, and James was not John; and if that were enough to ſhow on what the diſtinction between them was founded, his lordſhip need have gone no farther in his inquiry after that, for that he had found already: and yet methinks thither are we at laſt come again, as to the foundation of the diſtinction between them, viz. that they are ſeveral individuals in the same common nature. Nor can I here see any other ground of the distinction between those, that are several individuals in the same common nature, but this, that they are several individuals in the same common nature. Either this is all the meaning that his lordship's words, when considered, carry in them; or else I do not understand what they mean: and either way, I must own, they do not much towards the giving me clear and distinct apprehensions of nature and person.

in

One thing more I must remark to you, in his lordship's way of expressing himself here; and that is, in the former part of the words last read, he speaks, as he does all along, of the same common nature being in mankind, or in the several individuals: and, in the latter part of them, he speaks of several individuals being in the same common nature. I do by no means find fault with such figurative and common ways of speaking, in popular and ordinary discourses, where inaccurate thoughts allow inaccurate ways of speaking; but I think I may say, that metaphorical expressions (which seldom terminate in precise truth) should be as much as possible avoided, when men undertake to deliver clear and distinct apprehensions, and exact notions of things: because, being taken strictly and according to the letter, (as we find they are apt to be) they always puzzle and mislead, rather than enlighten and instruct.

I do not say this (continued he) with an intention to accuse his lordship of inaccurate notions; but yet, I think, his sticking so close all along to that vulgar way of speaking of the same common nature, being in several individuals, has made him less easy to be understood. For to speak truly and precisely of this matter, as in reality it is, there is no such thing as one and the same common nature in several individuals; for all, that in truth is in them, is particular, and can be nothing but particular. But the true meaning (when it has any) of that metaphorical and popular phrase, I take to be this, and no more, that every particular individual man or horse, &c. has such a nature or constitution, as agrees and is conformable to that idea, which that general name stands for.

His lordſhip's next words are; "and here lies the "true idea of a perſon, which ariſes from that manner "of ſubſiſtence which is in one individual, and is not "communicable to another." The reading of theſe words, ſaid he, makes me wiſh, that we had ſome other way of communicating our thoughts, than by words; for, no doubt, it would have been as much a pleaſure to have ſeen what his lordſhip's thoughts were when he writ this, as it is now an uneaſineſs to pudder in words and expreſſions, whoſe meaning one does not comprehend. But let us do the beſt we can. "And here, ſays "his lordſhip, lies the true idea of perſon."

Perſon being a diſ-ſyllable, that in itſelf ſignifies nothing; what is meant by the true idea of it (it having no idea, one more than another, that belongs to it, but the idea of the articulate ſound, that thoſe two ſyllables make in pronouncing) I do not underſtand. If by true idea be meant true ſignification, then theſe words will run thus; here lies the true ſignification of the word perſon: and then, to make it more intelligible, we muſt change here into herein, and then the whole comma will ſtand thus; herein lies the true ſignification of the word perſon: which reading, herein, muſt refer to the preceding words. And then the meaning of theſe words will be, the true ſignification of perſon lies in this, that "ſuppoſing there were no other difference in the ſeveral "individuals of the ſame kind, yet there is a difference "between them, as ſeveral individuals in the ſame "common nature." Now, if in this lies the true ſignification of the word perſon, he muſt find it here that can. For if he does find it in theſe words, he muſt find it to be ſuch a ſignification as will make the word perſon agree as well to Bucephalus and Podargus, as to Alexander: for let the difference between Bucephalus and Podargus, as ſeveral individuals in the ſame common nature, be what it will; it is certain, it will always be as great, as the difference between Alexander and Hector, as ſeveral individuals in the ſame common nature. So that, if the true ſignification of perſon lies in that difference, it will belong to Bucephalus and Podargus, as well as to Alexander and Hector. But let any one reason ever so subtilly or profoundly about the true idea, or the signification of the term person, he will never be able to make me understand, that Bucephalus and Podargus are persons, in the true signification of the word person, as commonly used in the English tongue.

one

But that which more certainly and for ever will hinder me from finding the true signification of person, lying in the foregoing words, is, that they require me to do what I find is impossible for me to do, i. e. find a difference between two individuals, as several individuals in the same common nature, without any other difference. For if I never find any other difference, I should never find two individuals. For first, we find some difference, and by that we find they are two or several individuals; but in this way we are bid to find two individuals, without any difference: but that, I find, is too subtile and sublime for my weak capacity. But when by any difference of time, or place, or any thing else, I have once found them to be two, or several, I cannot for ever after consider them but as several. They being once, by some difference, found to be two, it is unavoidable for me, from thenceforth, to consider them as two. But to find several where I find no difference; or, as his lordship is pleased to call it, external difference at all; is, I confess, too hard for me.

This his lordship farther tells us, in these words which follow; "which arises from the manner of subsistence, which is in one individual, which is not "communicable to another:" which is, I own, a learned way of speaking, and is supposed to contain some refined philosophic notion of it, which to me is either wholly incomprehensible, or else may be expressed in these plain and common words, viz. that every thing that exists has, in the time or place, or other perceivable differences of its existence, something incommunicable to all those of its own kind, whereby it will externally be kept several from all the rest. This, I think, is that which the learned have been pleased to term a peculiar manner of subsistence; but if this manner of ſubſiſtence be any thing elſe, it will need ſome farther explication to make me underſtand it.

His lordſhip's next words which follow, I muſt acknowledge, are alſo wholly incomprehenſible to me: they are, "an individual intelligent ſubſtance is rather "ſuppoſed to the making of a perſon, than the proper "definition of it."

Perſon is a word; and the idea that word ſtands for, or the proper ſignification of that word, is what I take his lordſhip is here giving us. Now what is meant by ſaying, "an individual intelligent ſubſtance is rather "ſuppoſed to the making the ſignification of the word "perſon, than the proper definition of it," is beyond my reach. And the reaſon his lordſhip adjoins, puts it in that, or any other ſenſe, farther from my comprehenſion. "For a perſon relates to ſomething, which "does diſtinguiſh it from another intelligent ſubſtance "in the ſame nature; and therefore the foundation of "it lies in the peculiar manner of ſubſiſtence, which "agrees to one, and none elſe, of the kind: and this "is that which is called perſonality."

Theſe words, if nothing elſe, convince me, that I am Davus, and not Oedipus; and ſo I muſt leave them.

His lordſhip, at laſt, gives us what, I think, he intends for a definition of perſon, in theſe words; "there-"fore a perſon is a complete intelligent ſubſtance, "with a peculiar manner of ſubſiſtence." Where I cannot but obſerve, that what was, as I think, denied or half denied to be the proper definition of perſon, in ſaying, "it was rather ſuppoſed to the making of "a perſon, than the proper definition of it," is yet here got into his lordſhip's definition of perſon; which I cannot ſuppoſe but his lordſhip takes to be a proper definition. There is only one word changed in it; and, inſtead of "individual intelligent ſubſtance," his lordſhip has put it "complete intelligent ſubſtance:" which, whether it makes his the more proper definition, I leave to others; ſince poſſibly ſome will be apt to think, that a proper definition of perſon cannot be well made, without the term individual, or an equivalent.

lent. But his lordſhip has, as appears by the place, put in complete, to exclude the ſoul from being a perſon; which, whether it does it or no, to me ſeems doubtful: becauſe poſſibly many may think, that the ſoul is a complete intelligent ſubſtance by itſelf, whether in the body or out of the body; becauſe every ſubſtance, that has a being, is a complete ſubſtance, whether joined or not joined to another. And as to the ſoul's being intelligent, no-body, I gueſs, thinks, that the ſoul is completed in that, by its union with the body; for then it would follow, that it would not be equally intelligent out of the body; which, I think, no-body will ſay.

And thus I have, at your requeſt, gone over all that his lordſhip has ſaid, to give us clear and diſtinct apprehenſions of nature and perſon, which are ſo neceſſary to the underſtanding the doctrine of the Trinity, and talking intelligibly about it. And if I ſhould judge of others by my own dulneſs, I ſhould fear that by his lordſhip's diſcourſe few would be helped to think or talk intelligibly about it. But I meaſure not others by my narrow capacity: I wiſh others may profit by his lordſhip's explication of nature and perſon, more than I have done. And ſo the converſation ended.

My lord, I ſhould not have troubled your lordſhip with a dialogue of this kind, had not your lordſhip forced me to it in my own defence. Your lordſhip, at the end of your above-mentioned explication of nature, has theſe words: "let us now ſee how far theſe things "can come from our ideas, by ſenſation and reflec-"tion." And to the like purpoſe, in the cloſe of your explication of perſon, your lordſhip ſays; "but how "do our ſimple ideas help us out in this matter? Can "we learn from them the difference of nature and per-"ſon?" Your lordſhip concludes we cannot. But you ſay, what makes a perſon muſt be underſtood ſome other way. And hereupon, my lord, my book is thought worthy by your lordſhip to be brought into the controverſy, and argued againſt, in your Vindication of the doctrine of the Trinity; becauſe, as your lordſhip conceives, clear and diſtinct apprehenſions of nature and perſon cannot be had from it.

I humbly crave leave to repreſent to your lordſhip, that if want of affording clear and diſtinct apprehenſions concerning nature and perſon, make any book anti-trinitarian, and, as ſuch, fit to be writ againſt by your lordſhip; your lordſhip ought, in the opinion of a great many men, in the firſt place, to write againſt your own Vindication of the doctrine of the Trinity: ſince, among the many I have conſulted concerning your lordſhip's notions of nature and perſon, I do not find any one that underſtands them better, or has got from them any clearer or more diſtinct apprehenſions concerning nature and perſon, than I myſelf, which indeed is none at all.

The owning of this to your lordſhip in my former letter, I find, diſpleaſed your lordſhip: I have therefore here laid before your lordſhip ſome part of thoſe difficulties which appear to me, and others, in your lordſhip's explication of nature and perſon, as my apology for ſaying, I had not learned any thing by it. And to make it evident, that if want of clear and diſtinct apprehenſions of nature and perſon involve any treatiſe in the unitarian controverſy; your lordſhip's, upon that account, is, I humbly conceive, as guilty as mine; and may be reckoned one of the firſt that ought to be charged with that offence, againſt the doctrine of the Trinity.

This, my lord, I cannot help thinking, till I underſtand better. Whether the not being able to get clear and diſtinct apprehenſions concerning nature and perſon, from what your lordſhip has ſaid of them, be the want of capacity in my underſtanding, or want of clearneſs in that which I have endeavoured to underſtand, I ſhall not preſume to ſay; of that the world muſt judge. If it be my dulneſs (as I cannot preſume much upon my own quickneſs, having every day experience how ſhort-ſighted I am) I have this yet to defend me from any very ſevere cenſure in the caſe, that I have as much endeavoured to underſtand your lordſhip, as I ever did to underſtand any-body. And if your your lordship's notions, laid down about nature and person, are plain and intelligible, there are a great many others, whose parts lie under no blemish in the world, who find them neither plain nor intelligible.

Pardon me therefore, I beseech you, my lord, if I return your lordship's question, "how do your lordship's notions help us out in this matter? Can we "learn from them clear and distinct apprehensions "concerning nature and person, and the grounds of "identity and distinction?" To which the answer will stand, no; till your lordship has explained your notions of them a little clearer, and shown what ultimately they are founded on and made up of, if they are not ultimately founded on and made up of our simple ideas, received from sensation and reflection; which is that for which, in this point, you except against my book: and yet, though your lordship sets yourself to prove, that they cannot be had from our simple ideas by sensation and reflection; though your lordship lays down several heads about them, yet you do not, that I see, offer any thing to instruct us from what other original they come, or whence they are to be had.

But perhaps this may be my want of understanding what your lordship has said about them: and, possibly, from the same cause it is, that I do not see how the four passages your lordship subjoins, as out of my book (though there be no such passages in my book, as, I think, your lordship acknowledges, since your lordship answers nothing to what I said thereupon;) the two things your lordship says are granted, that tend to the clearing this matter, and the four inferences your lordship makes; are all, or any of them, applied by your lordship, to show that clear and distinct apprehensions concerning nature and person cannot be had upon my principles; at least as clear as can be had upon your lordship's, when you please to let us know them.

Hitherto, my lord, I have considered only what is charged upon my book by your lordship, in reference to the unitarian controversy, viz. the manner and grounds on which my book has been, by your lordship, endeavoured to be brought into the controversy concerning the Trinity, with which it hath nothing to do: nor has your lordſhip, as I humbly conceive, yet ſhowed that it has.

There remain to be conſidered ſeveral things, which your lordſhip thinks faulty in my book; which, whether they have any thing to do or no with the doctrine of the Trinity, I think myſelf obliged to give your lordſhip ſatisfaction in, either by acknowledging my errours, or giving your lordſhip an account wherein your lordſhip's diſcourſe comes ſhort of convincing me of them. But theſe papers being already grown to a bulk that exceeds the ordinary ſize of a letter, I ſhall reſpite your lordſhip's farther trouble in this matter for the preſent, with this promiſe, that I ſhall not fail to return my acknowledgments to your lordſhip, for thoſe other parts of the letter you have honoured me with.

Before I conclude, it is fit, with due acknowledgment, I take notice of theſe words, in the cloſe of your lordſhip's letter: "I hope, that, in the managing "this debate, I have not either tranſgreſſed the rules "of civility, or miſtaken your meaning; both which "I have endeavoured to avoid. And I return you "thanks for the civilities you have expreſſed to me, "through your letter: and I do aſſure you, that it is "out of no diſreſpect, or the leaſt ill-will to you, that "I have again conſidered this matter," &c.

Your lordſhip hopes you have not miſtaken my meaning: and I, my lord, hope that where you have (as I humbly conceive I ſhall make it appear you have) miſtaken my meaning, I may, without offence, lay it before your lordſhip. And I the more confidently ground that hope upon this expreſſion of your lordſhip here, which I take to be intended to that purpoſe; ſince, in thoſe ſeveral inſtances I gave, in my former letter, of your lordſhip's miſtaking not only my meaning, but the very words of my book which you quoted, your lordſhip has had the goodneſs to bear with me, without any manner of reply.

Your lordſhip aſſures me, "that it is out of no diſ-"reſpect or the leaſt ill-will to me, that you have again "conſidered this matter."

My

My lord, my never having, by any act of mine, deserved otherwise of your lordship, is a strong reason to keep me from questioning what your lordship says. And, I hope, my part in the controversy has been such, that I may be excused from making any such profession, in reference to what I write to your lordship. And I shall take care to continue to defend myself so, in this controversy, which your lordship is pleased to have with me, that I shall not come within the need of any apology, that what I say is out of no disrespect or the least ill-will to your lordship. But this must not hinder me any where, from laying the argument in its due light, for the advantage of truth.

This, my lord, I say not to your lordship, who proposing to yourself, as you say in this very page, nothing but truth, will not, I know, take it amiss, that I endeavour to make every thing as plain and as clear as I can: but this I say, upon occasion of some exceptions of this kind, which I have heard others have made against the former letter I did myself the honour to write to your lordship, as if I did therein bear too hard upon your lordship. Though your lordship, who knows very well the end of arguing, as well as rules of civility, finds nothing to blame in my way of writing; and I should be very sorry it should deserve any other character, than what your lordship has been pleased to give it in the beginning of your postscript. It is my misfortune to have any controversy with your lordship; but since the concern of truth alone engages me in it, as I know your lordship will expect that I should omit nothing that should make for truth, for that is the end we both profess to aim at; so I shall take care to avoid all foreign, passionate, and unmannerly mixtures, which do no way become a lover of truth in any debate, especially with one of your lordship's character and dignity.

My lord, the imputation of a tendency to scepticism, and to the overthrowing any article of the christian faith, are no small charges; and all censures of that high nature, I humbly conceive, are with the more caution to be passed, the greater the authority is of the perſon they come from. But whether to pronounce ſo hardly of the book, merely upon ſurmiſes, be to be taken for a mark of good-will to the author, I muſt leave to your lordſhip. This I am ſure, I find the world thinks me obliged to vindicate myſelf. I have taken leave to ſay, merely upon ſurmiſes, becauſe I cannot ſee any argument your lordſhip has any where brought, to ſhow its tendency to ſcepticiſm, beyond what your lordſhip has in theſe words in the ſame page, viz. that it is your lordſhip's great prejudice againſt it that it leads to ſcepticiſm; or, that your lordſhip can find no way to attain to certainty in it, upon my grounds.

I confeſs, my lord, I think that there is a great part of the viſible, and a great deal more of the yet much larger intellectual world, wherein our poor and weak underſtandings, in this ſtate, are not capable of knowledge; and this, I think, a great part of mankind agrees with me in. But whether or no my way of certainty by ideas comes ſhort of what it ſhould, or your lordſhip's way, with or without ideas, will carry us to clearer and larger degrees of certainty; we ſhall ſee, when your lordſhip pleaſes to let us know wherein your way of certainty conſiſts. Till then, I think, to avoid ſcepticiſm, it is better to have ſome way of certainty (though it will not lead us to it in every thing) than no way at all.

The neceſſity your lordſhip has put upon me of vindicating myſelf, muſt be my apology for giving your lordſhip this ſecond trouble; which, I aſſure myſelf, you will not take amiſs, ſince your lordſhip was ſo much concerned for my vindication, as to declare, you had no reaſon to be ſorry, that the author of Chriſtianity not myſterious had given me occaſion to vindicate myſelf. I return your lordſhip my humble thanks, for affording me this ſecond opportunity to do it; and am, with the utmoſt reſpect,

My Lord,

Your lordſhip's moſt humble and moſt obedient ſervant,

JOHN LOCKE.

LONDON,
29 JUNE, 1697.

POSTSCRIPT.

My Lord,

THOUGH I have ſo great a precedent, as your lordſhip has given me in the letter you have honoured me with; yet, I doubt, whether even your lordſhip's example will be enough to juſtify me to the world, if, in a letter writ to one, I ſhould put a poſtſcript in anſwer to another man, to whom I do not ſpeak in my letter: I ſhall therefore only beg, that your lordſhip will be pleaſed to excuſe it, if you find a ſhort anſwer to the paper of another man, not big enough to be publiſhed by itſelf, appear under the ſame cover with my anſwer to your lordſhip. The paper itſelf came to my hands, at the ſame time that your lordſhip's letter did; and, containing ſome exceptions to my Eſſay concerning Human Underſtanding, is not wholly foreign in the matter of it.

AN ANSWER TO REMARKS UPON AN ESSAY concerning HUMAN UNDERSTANDING, &c.

BEFORE any thing came out againſt my Eſſay concerning Human Underſtanding the laſt year, I was told, that I muſt prepare myſelf for a ſtorm that was coming againſt it; it being reſolved by ſome men, that it was neceſſary that book of mine ſhould, as it is phraſed, be run down. I do not ſay, that the author of theſe Remarks was one of thoſe men: but I premiſe this as the reaſon of the anſwer I am about to give him. And though I do not ſay he was one of them, yet in this, I think, every indifferent reader will agree with me, that his letter does not very well ſuit with the character he takes upon himſelf, or the deſign he pretends in writing it.

He pretends, the buſineſs of his letter is to be informed: but if that were in earneſt ſo, I ſuppoſe he would have done two things quite otherwiſe than he has. The firſt is, that he would not have thought it neceſſary for his particular information, that his letter (that pretends inquiry in the body of it, though it carries remarks in the title) ſhould have been publiſhed in print: whereby I am apt to think, that however in it he puts on the perſon of a learner, yet he would miſs his aim, if he were not taken notice of as a teacher; and particularly, that his remarks ſhowed the world great faults in my book.

The other is, that he has not ſet his name to his letter of inquiries; whereby I might, by knowing the perſon

perſon that inquires, the better know how to ſuit my anſwer to him. I cannot much blame him in another reſpect, for concealing his name: for, I think, any one who appears among chriſtians, may be well aſhamed of his name, when he raiſes ſuch a doubt as this, viz. whether an infinitely powerful and wiſe being be veracious or no; unleſs falſehood be in ſuch reputation with this gentleman, that he concludes lying to be no mark of weakneſs and folly. Beſides, this author might, if he had pleaſed, have taken notice, that, in more places than one, I ſpeak of the goodneſs of God; another evidence, as I take it, of his veracity.

He ſeems concerned to know "upon what ground "I will build the divine law, when I purſue morality "to a demonſtration?"

If he had not been very much in haſte, he would have ſeen, that his queſtions, in that paragraph, are a little too forward; unleſs he thinks it neceſſary I ſhould write, when and upon what he thinks fit. When I know him better, I may perhaps think I owe him great obſervance; but ſo much as that very few men think due to themſelves.

I have ſaid indeed in my book, that I thought morality capable of demonſtration, as well as the mathematics: but I do not remember where I promiſed this gentleman to demonſtrate it to him.

He ſays, "if he knew upon what grounds I would "build my demonſtration of morality, he could make "a better judgment of it." His judgment who makes ſuch demands as this, and is ſo much in haſte to be a judge, that he cannot ſtay till what he has ſuch a mind to be ſitting upon, be born; does not ſeem of that conſequence, that any one ſhould be in haſte to gratify his impatience.

And ſince "he thinks the illiterate part of mankind "(which is the greateſt) muſt have a more compendi- "ous way to know their duty, than by long deduc- "tions;" he may do well to conſider, whether it were for their ſakes he publiſhed this queſtion, viz. "What "is the reaſon and ground of the divine law?"

Whoever

Whoever ſincerely acknowledges any law to be the law of God, cannot fail to acknowledge alſo, that it hath all that reaſon and ground that a juſt and wiſe law can or ought to have; and will eaſily perſuade himſelf to forbear raiſing ſuch queſtions and ſcruples about it.

A man that inſinuates, as he does, as if I held, that "the diſtinction of virtue and vice was to be picked "up by our eyes, or ears, or our noſtrils;" ſhows ſo much ignorance, or ſo much malice, that he deſerves no other anſwer but pity.

"The immortality of the ſoul is another thing, he "ſays, he cannot clear to himſelf, upon my princi-"ples." It may be ſo. The right reverend the lord biſhop of Worceſter, in the letter he has lately honoured me with in print, has undertaken to prove, upon my principles, the ſoul's immateriality; which, I ſuppoſe, this author will not queſtion to be a proof of its immortality. And to his lordſhip's letter I refer him for it. But if that will not ſerve his turn, I will tell him a principle of mine that will clear it to him; and that is, the revelation of life and immortality of Jeſus Chriſt, through the goſpel.

He mentions other doubts he has, unreſolved by my principles. If my principles do not teach them, the world, I think will, I am ſure I ſhall, be obliged to him to direct me to ſuch as will ſupply that defect in mine. For I never had the vanity to hope to out-do all other men. Nor did I propoſe to myſelf, in publiſhing my Eſſay, to be an anſwerer of queſtions; or expect that all doubts ſhould go out of the world, as ſoon as my book came into it.

The world has now my book, ſuch as it is: if any one finds, that there be many queſtions that my principles will not reſolve, he will do the world more ſervice to lay down ſuch principles as will reſolve them, than to quarrel with my ignorance (which I readily acknowledge) and poſſibly for that which cannot be done. I ſhall never think the worſe of mine, becauſe they will not reſolve every one's doubts, till I ſee thoſe principles, laid down by any one, that will; and then I will quit mine.

If

If any one finds any thing in my Eſſay to be corrected, he may, when he pleaſes, write againſt it; and when I think fit, I will anſwer him. For I do not intend my time ſhall be waſted at the pleaſure of every one, who may have a mind to pick holes in my book, and ſhow his ſkill in the art of confutation.

To conclude; were there nothing elſe in it, I ſhould not think it fit to trouble myſelf about the queſtions of a man, which he himſelf does not think worth the owning.

MR. LOCKE'S REPLY

TO THE RIGHT REVEREND THE

LORD BISHOP OF WORCESTER'S ANSWER

TO HIS

SECOND LETTER.

Wherein, beſides other incident Matters, what his Lordſhip has ſaid concerning Certainty by Reaſon, Certainty by Ideas, and Certainty by Faith; the Reſurrection of the Body; the Immateriality of the Soul; the Inconſiſtency of Mr. LOCKE's Notions with the Articles of the Chriſtian Faith, and their Tendency to Scepticiſm; is examined.

MR. LOCKE'S REPLY

TO THE

BISHOP OF WORCESTER'S ANSWER

TO HIS

SECOND LETTER.

MY LORD,

YOUR lordſhip, in the beginning of the laſt letter you honoured me with, ſeems ſo uneaſy and diſpleaſed at my having ſaid too much already in the queſtion between us, that I think I may conclude, you would be well enough pleaſed if I ſhould ſay no more; and you would diſpenſe with me, for not keeping my promiſe I made you to anſwer the other parts of your firſt letter. If this proceeds from any tenderneſs in your lordſhip for my reputation, that you would not have me expoſe myſelf by an overflow of words, in many places void of clearneſs, coherence, and argument, and that therefore might have been ſpared; I muſt acknowledge it is a piece of great charity, and ſuch wherein you will have a laſting advantage over me, ſince good manners will not permit me to return you the like. Or ſhould I, in the ebullition of thoughts, which in me your lordſhip finds as impetuous as the ſprings of Modena mentioned by Ramazzini, be in danger to forget myſelf, and to think I had ſome right to return the general complaint of length and intricacy without force; yet you have ſecured yourſelf from the ſuſpicion of any ſuch traſh on your ſide, by making cobwebs the eaſy product of thoſe who write out of their own thoughts, which it might be a crime in me to impute to your lordſhip.

If this complaint of yours be not a charitable warning to me, I cannot well gueſs at the deſign of it; for I would not think that in a controverſy, which you, my lord, have dragged me into, you would aſſume it as a privilege due to yourſelf to be as copious as you pleaſe, and ſay what you think fit, and expect I ſhould reply only ſo, and ſo much, as would juſt ſuit your good liking, and ſerve to ſet the cauſe right on that ſide which your lordſhip contends for.

My lord, I ſhall always acknowledge the great diſtance that is between your lordſhip and myſelf, and pay that deference that is due to your dignity and perſon. But controverſy, though it excludes not good manners, will not be managed with all that ſubmiſſion which one is ready to pay in other caſes. Truth, which is inflexible, has here its intereſt, which muſt not be given up, in a compliment. Plato and Ariſtotle, and other great names, muſt give way, rather than make us renounce truth, or the friendſhip we have for her.

This poſſibly your lordſhip will allow, for it is not ſpun out of my own thoughts; I have the authority of others for it, I think it was in print before I was born. But you will ſay however, I am too long in my replies. It is not impoſſible but it may be ſo. But with all due reſpect to your lordſhip's authority (the greatneſs whereof I ſhall always readily acknowledge) I muſt crave leave to ſay, that in this caſe you are by no means a proper judge. We are now, as well your lordſhip as myſelf, before a tribunal to which you have appealed, and before which you have brought me: it is the public muſt be judge, whether your lordſhip has enlarged too far in accuſing me, or I in defending myſelf. Common juſtice makes great allowance to a man pleading in his own defence; and a little length (if he ſhould be guilty of it) finds excuſe in the compaſſion of by-ſtanders, when they ſee a man cauſeleſsly attacked, after a new way, by a potent adverſary; and, under various pretences, occaſions ſought, and words wreſted to his diſadvantage.

This, my lord, you muſt give me leave to think to be my caſe, whilſt this ſtrange way your lordſhip has brought me into this controverſy; your gradual accuſations of my book, and the different cauſes your lordſhip has aſſigned of them; together with quotations out of it, which I cannot find there; and other things I have complained of (to ſome of which your lordſhip has not vouchvouchſafed any anſwer) ſhall remain unaccounted for, as I humbly conceive they do.

I confeſs my anſwers are long, and I wiſh they could have been ſhorter. But the difficulty I have to find out, and ſet before others your lordſhip's meaning, that they may ſee what I am anſwering to, and ſo be able to judge of the pertinency of what I ſay; has unavoidably enlarged them. Whether this be wholly owing to my dulneſs, or whether a little perplexedneſs both as to grammar and coherence, cauſed by thoſe numbers of thoughts, whether of your own or others, that crowd from all parts to be ſet down when you write, may not be allowed to have ſome ſhare in it, I ſhall not preſume to ſay. I am at the mercy of your lordſhip, and my other readers in the point, and know not how to avoid a fault that has no remedy.

Your lordſhip ſays, "the world ſoon grows weary "of controverſies, eſpecially when they are about per- "ſonal matters; which made your lordſhip wonder "that one who underſtands the world ſo well, ſhould "ſpend above fifty pages in renewing and enlarging a "complaint wholly concerning himſelf."

To which give me leave to ſay, that if your lordſhip had ſo much conſidered the world, and what it is not much pleaſed with, when you publiſhed your diſcourſe in vindication of the Trinity, perhaps your lordſhip had not ſo perſonally concerned me in that controverſy, as it appears now you have, and continue ſtill to do.

Your lordſhip wonders "that I ſpend above fifty pages "in renewing and enlarging my complaint concerning "myſelf." Your wonder, I humbly conceive, will not be ſo great, when you recollect, that your anſwer to my complaint, and the ſatisfaction you propoſed to give me and others in that perſonal matter, began the firſt letter you honoured me with, and ended where you ſaid, "you ſuppoſe the reaſon of your "mentioning my words ſo often was now no longer "a riddle to me; and ſo you proceeded to other par- "ticulars of my vindication." If therefore I have ſpent fifty pages of my anſwer, in ſhowing that what you offered in forty-ſeven pages for my ſatisfaction was none, but that the riddle was a riddle ſtill; the diſproportion in the number of pages is not ſo great as to be the ſubject of much wonder: eſpecially to thoſe who conſider, that, in what you call perſonal matter, I was ſhowing that my Eſſay, having in it nothing contrary to the doctrine of the Trinity, was yet brought into that diſpute; and that therefore I had reaſon to complain of it, and of the manner of its being brought in: and if you had pleaſed not to have moved other queſtions, nor brought other charges againſt my book till this, which was the occaſion and ſubject of my firſt letter, had been cleared; by making out that the paſſages you had, in your Vindication of the doctrine of the Trinity, quoted out of my book, had ſomething in them againſt the doctrine of the Trinity, and ſo were, with juſt reaſon, brought by you, as they were, into that diſpute; there had been no other but that perſonal matter, as you call it, between us.

In the examination of thoſe pages meant, as you ſaid, for my ſatisfaction, and of other parts of your letter, I found (contrary to what I expected) matter of renewing and enlarging my complaint, and this I took notice of and ſet down in my reply, which it ſeems I ſhould not have done: the knowledge of the world ſhould have taught me better; and I ſhould have taken that for ſatisfaction which you were pleaſed to give, in which I could not find any, nor, as I believe, any intelligent or impartial reader. So that your lordſhip's care of the world, that it ſhould not grow weary of this controverſy, and the fault you find of my miſemploying fifty pages of my letter, reduces itſelf at laſt in effect to no more but this, that your lordſhip ſhould have a liberty to ſay what you pleaſe, pay me in what coin you think fit; my part ſhould be to be ſatisfied with it, reſt content, and ſay nothing. This indeed might be a way not to weary the world, and to ſave fifty pages of clean paper, and put ſuch an end to the controverſy, as your lordſhip would not diſlike.

I learn from your lordſhip, that it is the firſt part of wiſdom, in ſome men's opinions, not to begin in ſuch diſputes. What the knowledge of the world (which is a ſort a ſort of wiſdom) ſhould in your lordſhip's opinion make a man do, when one of your lordſhip's character begins with him, is very plain: he is not to reply, ſo far as he judges his defence and the matter requires, but as your lordſhip is pleaſed to allow; which ſome may think no better than if one might not reply at all.

After having thus rebuked me for having been too copious in my reply, in the next words your lordſhip inſtructs me what I ſhould have anſwered; that "I "ſhould have cleared myſelf by declaring to the world, "that I owned the doctrine of the Trinity, as it hath "been received in the chriſtian church."

This, as I take it, is a mere perſonal matter, of the ſame woof with a Spaniſh ſan-benito, and, as it ſeems to me, deſigned to ſit cloſe to me. What muſt I do now, my lord? Muſt I ſilently put on and wear this badge of your lordſhip's favour, and, as one well underſtanding the world, ſay not a word of it, becauſe the world ſoon grows weary of perſonal matters? If in gratitude for this perſonal favour I ought to be ſilent, yet I am forced to tell you, that, in what you require of me here, you poſſibly have cut out too much work for a poor ordinary layman, for whom it is too hard to know how a doctrine ſo diſputed has been received in the chriſtian church, and who might have thought it enough to own it as delivered in the ſcriptures. Your lordſhip herein lays upon me what I cannot do, without owning to know what I am ſure I do not know: for how the doctrine of the Trinity has been always received in the chriſtian church, I confeſs myſelf ignorant. I have not had time to examine the hiſtory of it, and to read thoſe controverſies that have been writ about it: and to own a doctrine as received by others, when I do not know how theſe others received it, is perhaps a ſhort way to orthodoxy, that may ſatisfy ſome men: but he that takes this way to give ſatisfaction, in my opinion makes a little bold with truth; and it may be queſtioned whether ſuch a profeſſion be pleaſing to that God, who requires truth in the inward parts, however acceptable it may in any man be to his dioceſan.

I presume your lordship, in your discourse in vindication of the doctrine of the Trinity, intends to give it us as it has been received in the christian church. And I think your words, viz. "it is the sense of the christian "church which you are bound to defend, and no par- "ticular opinions of your own," authorize one to think so. But if I am to own it as your lordship has there delivered it, I must own what I do not understand; for I confess your exposition of the sense of the church wholly transcends my capacity.

If you require me to own it with an implicit faith, I shall pay that deference as soon to your lordship's exposition of the doctrine of the church, as any one's. But if I must understand and know what I own, it is my misfortune, and I cannot deny, that I am as far from owning what you in that discourse deliver, as I can be from professing the most unintelligible thing that ever I read, to be the doctrine that I own.

Whether I make more use of my poor understanding in the case, than you are willing to allow every one of your readers, I cannot tell; but such an understanding as God has given me is the best I have, and that which I must use in the apprehending what others say, before I can own the truth of it: and for this there is no help that I know.

That which keeps me a little in countenance, is, that, if I mistake not, men of no mean parts, even divines of the church of England, and those of neither the lowest reputation nor rank, find their understandings fail them on this occasion; and stick not to own that they understand not your lordship in that discourse, and particularly that your sixth chapter is unintelligible to them as well as me; whether the fault be in their or my understanding, the world must be judge. But this is only by the by, for this is not the answer I here intend your lordship.

Your lordship tells me, that, "to clear myself, I "should have owned to the world the doctrine of the "Trinity, as it has been received," &c. Answer. I know not whether in a dispute managed after a new way, wherein one man is urged against, and another man's words words all along quoted, it may not alſo be a good, as well as a new rule, for the anſwerer to reply to what was never objected, and clear himſelf from what was never laid to his charge. If this be not ſo, and that this new way of attacking requires not this new way of defence, your lordſhip's preſcription to me here what I ſhould have done, will, amongſt the moſt intelligent and impartial readers, paſs for a ſtrange rule in controverſy, and ſuch as the learnedeſt of them will not be able to find in all antiquity; and therefore muſt be imputed to ſomething elſe than your lordſhip's great learning.

Did your lordſhip in the diſcourſe of the vindication of the Trinity, wherein you firſt fell upon my book, or in your letter (my anſwer to which you are here correcting) did your lordſhip, I ſay, any where object to me, that "I did not own the doctrine of the Trinity, as it has "been received in the chriſtian church," &c.? If you did, the objection was ſo ſecret, ſo hidden, ſo artificial, that your words declared quite the contrary. In the Vindication of the doctrine of the Trinity, your lordſhip ſays, that my notions were borrowed to ſerve other purpoſes [whereby, if I underſtand you right, you meant againſt the doctrine of the Trinity] than I intended them; which you repeat again * for my ſatisfaction, and inſiſt † upon for my vindication.

You having ſo ſolemnly more than once profeſſed to clear me and my intentions from all ſuſpicion of having any part in that controverſy, as appears farther in the cloſe of your firſt letter, where all you charge on me, is the ill uſe that others had, or might make of my notions; how could I ſuppoſe ſuch an objection made by your lordſhip, which you declare againſt, without accuſing your lordſhip of manifeſt prevarication?

If your lordſhip had any thing upon your mind, any ſecret aims, which you did not think fit to own, but yet would have me divine and anſwer to, as if I knew them; this, I confeſs, is too much for me, who look no farther into men's thoughts, than as they appear in their books. Where you have given your thoughts vent in your words, I have not, I think, omitted to take notice of them, not wholly paſſing by thoſe inſinuations, which have been dropped from your lordſhip's pen; which from another, who had not profeſſed ſo much perſonal reſpect, would have ſhown no exceeding good diſpoſition of mind towards me.

* Anſwer 1. † Ibid.

When your lordſhip ſhall go on to accuſe me of not believing the doctrine of the Trinity, as received in the chriſtian church, or any other doctrine you ſhall think fit, I ſhall anſwer as I would to an inquiſitor. For though your lordſhip tells me, "I need not be afraid of "the inquiſition, or that you intended to charge me "with hereſy in denying the Trinity;" yet he that ſhall conſider your lordſhip's proceeding with me from the beginning, as far as it is hitherto gone, may have reaſon to think, that the methods and management of that holy office are not wholly unknown to your lordſhip, nor have eſcaped your great reading. Your proceedings with me have had theſe ſteps:

1. Several paſſages of my Eſſay of Human Underſtanding, and ſome of them relating barely to the being of a God, and other matters wholly remote from any queſtion about the Trinity, were brought into the Vindication of the doctrine of the Trinity, and there argued againſt as containing the errours of thoſe and them; which thoſe and them are not known to this day.

2. In your lordſhip's anſwer to my firſt letter, when what was given as the great reaſon why my Eſſay was brought into that controverſy, viz. becauſe in it "certainty was founded upon clear and diſtinct ideas;" was found to fail, and was only a ſuppoſition of your own; other accuſations were ſought againſt it, in relation to the doctrine of the Trinity: viz. that "it might "be of dangerous conſequence to that doctrine, to introduce the new term of ideas, and to place certainty "in the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of "our ideas." What are become of theſe charges, we ſhall ſee in the progreſs of this letter, when we come to conſider what your lordſhip has replied to my anſwer upon theſe points.

3. Theſe

3. Theſe accuſations not having, it ſeems, weight enough to effect what you intended, my book has been rummaged again to find new and more important faults in it; and now at laſt, at the third effort, "my notions "of ideas are found inconſiſtent with the articles of the "chriſtian faith." This indeed carries ſome ſound in it, and may be thought worthy the name and pains of ſo great a man, and zealous a father of the church, as your lordſhip.

That I may not be too bold in affirming a thing I was not privy to, give me leave, my lord, to tell your lordſhip why I preſume my book has upon this occaſion been looked over again, to ſee what could be found in it capable to bear a deeper accuſation, that might look like ſomething in a title-page. Your lordſhip, by your ſtation in the church, and the zeal you have ſhown in defending its articles, could not be ſuppoſed, when you firſt brought my book into this controverſy, to have omitted theſe great enormities that it now ſtands accuſed of, and to have cited it for ſmaller miſtakes, ſome whereof were not found, but only imagined to be in it; if you had then known theſe great faults, which you now charge it with, to have been in it. If your lordſhip had been apprized of its being guilty of ſuch dangerous errours, you would not certainly have paſſed them by: and therefore I think one may reaſonably conclude, that my Eſſay was new looked into on purpoſe.

Your lordſhip ſays, "that what you have done herein, "you thought it your duty to do, not with reſpect to "yourſelf, but to ſome of the myſteries of our faith, "which you do not charge me with oppoſing, but by "laying ſuch foundations as do tend to the overthrow "of them." It cannot be doubted but your duty would have made you at the firſt warn the world, that "my "notions were inconſiſtent with the articles of the "chriſtian faith," if your lordſhip had then known it: though the exceſſive reſpect and tenderneſs you expreſs towards me perſonally in the immediately preceding words, would be enough utterly to confound me, were I not a little acquainted with your lordſhip's civilities in this kind. For you tell me, "that theſe things laid

"toge-

" together made your lordſhip think it neceſſary to do " that which you was unwilling to do, until I had " driven you to it; which was to ſhow the reaſons you " had, why you looked on my notion of ideas and of " certainty by them, as inconſiſtent with itſelf, and with " ſome important articles of the chriſtian faith."

What muſt I think now, my lord, of theſe words? Muſt I take them as a mere compliment, which is never to be interpreted rigorouſly, according to the preciſe meaning of the words? Or muſt I believe that your unwillingneſs to do ſo hard a thing to me reſtrained your duty, and you could not prevail on yourſelf (how much ſoever the myſteries of faith were in danger to be overthrown) to get out theſe harſh words, viz. that " my " notions were inconſiſtent with the articles of the " chriſtian faith," till your third onſet, after I had forced you to your duty by two replies of mine?

It will not become me, my lord, to make myſelf a compliment from your words, which you did not intend me in them. But, on the other ſide, I would not willingly neglect to acknowledge any civility from your lordſhip in the full extent of it. The buſineſs is a little nice, becauſe what is contained in thoſe paſſages cannot by a leſs ſkilful hand than yours be well put together, though they immediately follow one another. This, I am ſure, falls out very untowardly, that your lordſhip ſhould drive me (who had much rather have been otherwiſe employed) to drive your lordſhip to do that which you were unwilling to do. The world ſees how much I was driven: for what cenſures, what imputations muſt my book have lain under, if I had not cleared it from thoſe accuſations your lordſhip brought againſt it; when I am charged now with evaſions, for not clearing myſelf from an accuſation which you never brought againſt me? But if it be an evaſion not to anſwer to an objection that has not been made, what is it, I beſeech you, my lord, to make no reply to objections that have been made? Of which I promiſe to give your lordſhip a liſt, whenever you ſhall pleaſe to call for it.

I forbear it now, for fear that if I ſhould ſay all that I might upon this new accuſation, it would be more than

than would ſuit with your lordſhip's liking; and you ſhould complain again that you have opened a paſſage which brings to your mind Ramazzini and his ſprings of Modena. But your lordſhip need not be afraid of being overwhelmed with the ebullition of my thoughts, nor much trouble yourſelf to find a way to give check to it: mere ebullition of thoughts never overwhelms or ſinks any one but the author himſelf; but if it carries truth with it, that I confeſs has force, and it may be troubleſome to thoſe that ſtand in its way.

Your lordſhip ſays, "you ſee how dangerous it is, to "give occaſion to one of ſuch a fruitful invention as I "am, to write."

I am obliged to your lordſhip, that you think my invention worth concerning yourſelf about, though it be ſo unlucky as to have your lordſhip and me always differ about the meaſure of its fertility. In your firſt anſwer you thought I too much extended the fertility of my invention, and aſcribed to it what it had no title to; and here, I think, you make the fertility of my invention greater than it is. For in what I have anſwered to your lordſhip, there ſeems to me no need at all of a fertile invention. It is true, it has been hard for me to find out who you writ againſt, or what you meant in many places. As ſoon as that was found, the anſwer lay always ſo obvious and ſo eaſy, that there needed no labour of invention to diſcover what one ſhould reply. The things themſelves (where there were any) ſtripped of the ornaments of ſcholaſtic language, and the leſs obvious ways of learned writings, ſeemed to me to carry their anſwers viſibly with them. This permit me, my lord, to ſay, that however fertile my invention is, it has not in all this controverſy produced one fiction or wrong quotation.

But, before I leave the anſwer you dictate, permit me to obſerve that I am ſo unfortunate to be blamed for owning what I was not accuſed to diſown; and here for not owning what I was never charged to diſown. The like misfortune have my poor writings: they offend your lordſhip in ſome places, becauſe they are new; and in others, becauſe they are not new.

Your

Your next words, which are a new charge, I ſhall paſs over till I come to your proof of them, and proceed to the next paragraph. Your lordſhip tells me, "you ſhall wave all unneceſſary repetitions, and come "immediately to the matter of my complaint, as it is "renewed in my ſecond letter."

What your lordſhip means by unneceſſary repetitions here, ſeems to be of a piece with your blaming me in the foregoing page, for having ſaid too much in my own defence; and this taken all together, confirms my opinion, that in your thoughts it would have been better I ſhould have replied nothing at all. For you having ſet down here near twenty lines as a neceſſary repetition out of your former letter, your lordſhip omits my anſwer to them as wholly unneceſſary to be ſeen; and conſequently you muſt think was at firſt unneceſſary to have been ſaid. For when the ſame words are neceſſary to be repeated again, if the ſame reply which was made to them be not thought fit to be repeated too, it is plainly judged to be nothing to the purpoſe, and ſhould have been ſpared at firſt.

It is true, your lordſhip has ſet down ſome few expreſſions taken out of ſeveral parts of my reply; but in what manner, the reader cannot clearly ſee, without going back to the original of this matter. He muſt therefore pardon me the trouble of a deduction, which cannot be avoided where controverſy is managed at this rate; which neceſſitates, and ſo excuſes the length of the anſwer.

My book was brought into the trinitarian controverſy by theſe ſteps. Your lordſhip ſays, that,

"1. The unitarians have not explained the nature "and bounds of reaſon.

"2. The author of Chriſtianity not myſterious, to "make amends for this, has offered an account of rea-"ſon.

"3. His doctrine concerning reaſon ſuppoſes that "we muſt have clear and diſtinct ideas of whatever we "pretend to any certainty of in our mind.

"4. Your lordſhip calls this a new way of reaſon-"ing.

"5. This

" 5. This gentleman of this new way of reasoning," in his first chapter, says something which has a conformity with some of the notions in my book. But it is to be observed he speaks them as his own thoughts, and not upon my authority, nor with taking any notice of me.

6. By virtue of this, he is presently entitled to I know not how much of my book; and divers passages of my Essay are quoted, and attributed to him under the title of " the gentlemen of the new way of reasoning," (for he is by this time turned into a troop) and certain unknown (if they are not all contained in this one author's doublet) they and these, are made by your lordship to lay about them shrewdly for several pages together in your lordship's Vindication of the doctrine of the Trinity, &c. with passages taken out of my book, which your lordship was at the pains to quote as theirs, i. e. certain unknown anti-trinitarians.

Of this your lordship's way, strange and new to me, of dealing with my book, I took notice.

To which your lordship tells me here you replied in these following words, which your lordship has set down as no unnecessary repetition. Your words are: " it " was because the person who opposed the mysteries of " christianity went upon my grounds, and made use of " my words;" although your lordship declared withal, " that they were used to other purposes than I intended " them:" and your lordship confessed, " that the rea- " son why you quoted my words so much, was, because " your lordship found my notions, as to certainty by " ideas, was the main foundation on which the author " of Christianity not mysterious went; and that he had " nothing that looked like reason, if that principle were " removed, which made your lordship so much endea- " vour to show, that it would not hold; and so you " supposed the reason why your lordship so often men- " tioned my words, was no longer a riddle to me." And to this repetition your lordship subjoins, that " I " set down these passages in my second letter," but with these words annexed, " that all this seems to me to " do nothing to the clearing of this matter."

Answer.

Anſwer. I ſay ſo indeed in the place quoted by your lordſhip, and if I had ſaid no more, your lordſhip had done me juſtice in ſetting down barely theſe words as my reply, which being ſet down when your lordſhip was in the way of repeating your own words with no ſparing hand, as we ſhall ſee by and by, theſe few of mine ſet down thus, without the leaſt intimation that I had ſaid any thing more, cannot but leave the reader under an opinion, that this was my whole reply.

But if your lordſhip will pleaſe to turn to that place of my ſecond letter, out of which you take theſe words, I preſume you will find that I not only ſaid, but proved, " that what you had ſaid in the words above repeated, " to clear the riddle in your lordſhip's way of writing, " did nothing towards it."

That which was the riddle to me, was, that your lordſhip writ againſt others, and yet quoted only my words; and that you pinned my words, which you argued againſt, upon a certain ſort of theſe and them that no-where appeared, or were to be found; and by this way brought my book into the controverſy.

To this your lordſhip ſays, " you told me it was " becauſe the perſon who oppoſed the myſteries of " chriſtianity, went upon my grounds, and made uſe " of my words."

Anſwer. He that will be at the pains to compare this, which you call a repetition here, with the place you quote for it, viz. Anſ. 1. will, I humbly conceive, find it a new ſort of repetition: unleſs the ſetting down of words and expreſſions not to be found in it be the repetition of any paſſage. But for a repetition, let us take it of what your lordſhip had ſaid before.

The reaſon, and the only reaſon there given why you quoted my words after the manner you did, was, " be- " cauſe you found my notions as to certainty by ideas, " was the main foundation which the author of Chriſ- " tianity not myſterious went upon." Theſe are the words in your lordſhip's firſt letter, and this the only reaſon there given, though it hath grown a little by repetition. And to this my reply was, " that I thought " your lordſhip had found, that that which the author " of

" of Christianity not mysterious went upon, and for " which he was made one of the gentlemen of the new " way of reasoning, opposite to the doctrine of the " Trinity, was, that he made or supposed clear and " distinct ideas necessary to certainty: but that was not " my notion as to certainty by ideas," &c. Which reply, my lord, did not barely say, but showed the reason why I said, that what your lordship had offered as the reason of your manner of proceeding, did nothing towards the clearing of it: unless it could clear the matter, to say you joined me with the author of Christianity not mysterious, who goes upon a different notion of certainty from mine, because he goes upon the same with me. For he (as your lordship supposes) making certainty to consist in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of clear and distinct ideas; and I, on the contrary, making it consist in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of such ideas as we have, whether they be perfectly in all their parts clear and distinct or no: it is impossible he should go upon my grounds, whilst they are so different, or that his going upon my grounds should be the reason of your lordship's joining me with him. And now I leave your lordship to judge, how you had cleared this matter; and whether what I had answered, did not prove that what you said did nothing towards the clearing of it.

This one thing, methinks, your lordship has made very clear, that you thought it necessary to find some way to bring in my book, where you were arguing against that author, that he might be the person, and mine the words you would argue against together. But it is as clear that the particular matter which your lordship made use of to this purpose, happened to be somewhat unluckily chosen. For your lordship having accused him of supposing clear and distinct ideas necessary to certainty, which you declared to be the opinion you opposed, and for that opinion having made him a gentleman of the new way of reasoning, your lordship imagined that was the notion of certainty I went on. But it falling out otherwise, and I denying it to be mine, the imaginary tie between that author and me was unexpectedly diſſolved; and there was no appearance of reaſon for bringing paſſages out of my book, and arguing againſt them as your lordſhip did, as if they were that author's.

was

To juſtify this (ſince my notion of certainty could not be brought to agree with what he was charged with, as oppoſite to the doctrine of the Trinity) he at any rate muſt be brought to agree with me, and to go upon my notion of certainty. Pardon me, my lord, that I ſay at any rate. The reaſon I have to think ſo, is this: either that the author does make clear and diſtinct ideas neceſſary to certainty, and ſo does not go upon my notion of certainty; and then your aſſigning his going upon my notion of certainty, as the reaſon for your joining us as you did, ſhows no more but a willingneſs in your lordſhip to have us joined: or he does not lay all certainty only in clear and diſtinct ideas, and ſo poſſibly for aught I know may go upon my notion of certainty. But then, my lord, the reaſon of your firſt bringing him and me into this diſpute, will appear to have been none. All your arguing againſt the gentlemen of this new way of reaſoning will be found to be againſt no-body, ſince there is no-body to be found that lays all foundation of certainty only in clear and diſtinct ideas; no-body to be found, that holds the opinion that your lordſhip oppoſes.

Having thus given you an account of ſome part of my reply (to what your lordſhip really anſwered in your firſt letter) to ſhow that my reply contained ſomething more than theſe words here ſet down by your lordſhip, viz. "that all this ſeems to me to do nothing "to the clearing this matter:" I come now to thoſe parts of your repetition, as your lordſhip is pleaſed to call it, wherein there is nothing repeated.

Your lordſhip ſays, "that you told me" the reaſon why I was brought into the controverſy after the manner I had complained of, "was becauſe the perſon who "oppoſed the myſteries of chriſtianity, went upon my "grounds;" and for this you quote your firſt letter. But having turned to that place, and finding there theſe words, "that you found my notions as to certainty by

"ideas

" ideas was the main foundation which that author " went upon;" which are far from being repeated in the words ſet down here, unleſs grounds in general be the ſame with the notions as to certainty by ideas: I beg leave to conſider what you here ſay as new to me, and not repeated.

Your lordſhip ſays, that you brought me into the controverſy as you did, " becauſe the author went " upon my grounds." It is poſſible he did, or did not: but it cannot appear that he did go upon my grounds, till thoſe grounds are aſſigned, and the places both out of him and me produced to ſhow, that we agree in the ſame grounds, and go both upon them; when this is done, there will be room to conſider whether it be ſo or no.

In the mean time, you have brought me into the controverſy, for his going upon this particular ground, ſuppoſed to be mine, " that clear and diſtinct ideas are " neceſſary to certainty." It can do nothing towards the clearing this, to ſay in general, as your lordſhip does, " that he went upon my grounds;" becauſe though he ſhould agree with me in ſeveral other things, but differ from me in this one notion of certainty, there could be no reaſon for your dealing with me as you have done: that notion of certainty being your very exception againſt his account of reaſon, and the ſole occaſion you took of bringing in paſſages out of my book, and the very foundation of arguing againſt them.

Your lordſhip farther ſays here, in this repetition, which you did not ſay before in the place referred to as repeated, " that he made uſe of my words." I think he did of words ſomething like mine. But as I humbly conceive alſo, he made uſe of them, as his own, and not as my words; for I do not remember that he quoted me for them. This I am ſure, that in the words quoted out of him by your lordſhip, upon which my book is brought in, there is not one ſyllable of certainty by ideas.

No doubt whatever he or I, or any one, have ſaid, if your lordſhip diſapproves of it, you have a right to queſtion him that ſaid it. But I do not ſee how this gives your lordſhip any right to entitle any body to what he does not ſay, whoever elſe ſays it.

The author of Chriſtianity not myſterious ſays in his book ſomething ſuitable to what I had ſaid in mine; borrowed or not borrowed from mine, I leave your lordſhip to determine for him. But I do not ſee what ground that gives your lordſhip to concern me in the controverſy you have with him, for things I ſay which he does not; and which I ſay to a different purpoſe from his. Let that author and I agree in this one notion of certainty as much as you pleaſe, what reaſon, I beſeech your lordſhip, could this be, to quote my words as his, who never uſed them; and to purpoſes, as you ſay more than once, to which I never intended them? This was that which I complained was a riddle to me. And ſince your lordſhip can give no other reaſon for it, than thoſe we have hitherto ſeen, I think it is ſufficiently unriddled, and you are in the right when you ſay, "you think it no longer a riddle to me."

I eaſily grant my little reading may not have inſtructed me, what has been, or what may be done, in the ſeveral ways of writing and managing of controverſy, which like war always produces new ſtratagems: only I beg my ignorance may be my apology for ſaying, that this appears a new way of writing to me, and this is the firſt time I ever met with it.

But let the ten lines which your lordſhip has ſet down out of him be, if you pleaſe, ſuppoſed to be preciſely my words, and that he quoted my book for them, I do not ſee how even this intitles him to any more of my book than he has quoted; or how any words of mine, in other parts of my book, can be aſcribed to him, or argued againſt as his, or rather, as I know not whoſe, which was the thing I complained of; for the theſe and they, thoſe paſſages of my book were aſcribed to, could not be that author, for he uſed them not; nor the author of the Eſſay of Human Underſtanding, for he was not argued againſt, but was diſcharged from the controverſy under debate. So that neither he nor I being the they and thoſe, that ſo often occur, and deſerved ſo much pains from your lordſhip; I could not not but complain of this, to me, incomprehensible way of bringing my book into that controversy.

Another part of your lordship's repetition, which, I humbly conceive, is no repetition, because this also I find not in that passage quoted for it, is this, that your lordship confessed that the reason why you quoted my words so much.

My lord, I do not remember any need your lordship had to give a reason why you quoted my words so much, because I do not remember that I made that the matter of my complaint. That which I complained of, was not the quantity of what was quoted out of my book, but the manner of quoting it, viz. "that I was "so every-where joined with others, under the com- "prehensive words they and them, though my book "alone were every-where quoted, that the world would "be apt to think, I was the person who argued against "the Trinity." And again, "that which I com- "plained of was, that I was made one of the gentle- "men of the new way of reasoning, without being "guilty of what made them so, and was so brought "into a chapter wherein I thought myself not con- "cerned; which was managed so, that my book was "all along quoted, and others argued against; others "were entitled to what I said, and I to what others "said, without knowing why or how." Nay, I told your lordship in that very reply, "that if your lord- "ship had directly questioned any of my opinions, I "should not have complained." Thus your lordship sees my complaint was not of the largeness, but of the manner of your quotations. But of that, in all these many pages employed by your lordship for my satisfaction, you, as I remember, have not been pleased to offer any reason, nor can I hitherto find it any way cleared: when I do, I shall readily acknowledge your great mastery in this, as in all other ways of writing.

I have in the foregoing pages, for the clearing this matter, been pleased to take notice of them and those, as directly signifying no-body. Whether your lordship will excuse me for so doing, I know not, since I perceive such slight words as them and those are not to be minded in your lordſhip's writings: your lordſhip has a privilege to uſe ſuch trifling particles, without taking any great care what or whom they refer to.

To ſhow the reader that I do not talk without book in the caſe, I ſhall ſet down your lordſhip's own words: "what a hard fate doth that man lie under, that falls "into the hands of a ſevere critic! He muſt have care "of his but, and for, and them, and it. For the leaſt "ambiguity in any of theſe, will fill up pages in an "anſwer, and make a book look conſiderable for the "bulk of it. And what muſt a man do, who is to "anſwer all ſuch objections about the uſe of parti-"cles?" I humbly conceive it is not without reaſon, that your lordſhip here claims an exemption from having a care of your but, and your for, and your them, and other particles. The ſequel of your letter will ſhow, that it is a privilege your lordſhip makes great uſe of, and therefore have reaſon to be tender of it, and to cry out againſt thoſe unmannerly critics, who queſtion it. Upon this conſideration, I cannot but look on it as a misfortune to me, that it ſhould fall in my way to diſpleaſe your lordſhip, by diſturbing you in the quiet, and perhaps antient poſſeſſion of ſo convenient a privilege. But how great ſoever the advantages of it may be to a writer, I, upon experience, find it is very troubleſome and perplexing to a reader, who is concerned to underſtand what is written, that he may anſwer to it. But to return to the place we were upon.

Your lordſhip goes on and ſays, "whether it doth, "or no," i. e. whether what your lordſhip had ſaid doth clear this matter or no, "you are content to leave "it to any indifferent reader; and there it muſt reſt at "laſt, although I ſhould write volumes upon it."

Upon the reading of theſe laſt words of your lordſhip's, I thought you had quite done with this perſonal matter, ſo apt, as you ſay, to weary the world. But whether it be that your lordſhip is not much ſatisfied in the handling of it, or in the letting it alone; whether your lordſhip meant by theſe laſt words, that what I write about it is volumes, i. e. too much, as your lordſhip has told me in the firſt page; but what your lordship says about it, is but necessary: whether these or any other be the cause of it, personal matter, as it seems, is very importunate and troublesome to your lordship, as it is to the world. You turn it going in the end of one paragraph, and personal matter thrusts itself in again in the beginning of the next, whether of itself, without your lordship's notice or consent, I examine not. But thus stand the immediately following words, wherein your lordship asks me, "but for what "cause do I continue so unsatisfied?" To which you make me give this answer, "that the cause why I continue so unsatisfied, is, that the author mentioned went upon this ground, that clear and distinct ideas are necessary to certainty, but that is not my notion as to certainty by ideas; which is, that certainty consists in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of ideas, such as we have, whether they be in all their parts perfectly clear and distinct or no; and that I have no notions of certainty more than this one."

lordſhip

These words, which your lordship has set down for mine, I have printed in a distinct character, that the reader may take particular notice of them; not that there is any thing very remarkable in this passage itself, but because it makes the business of the fourscore following passages. For the three several answers that your lordship says you have given to it, and that which you call your defence of them, reach, as I take it, to the 87th page. But another particular reason why this answer, which your lordship has made for me to a question of your own putting, is distinguished by a particular character, is to save frequent repetitions of it; that the reader, by having recourse to it, may see whether those things, which your lordship says of it, be so or no, and judge whether I am in the wrong, when I assure him, that I cannot find them to be as you say.

Only before I come to what your lordship positively says of this which you call my answer, I crave leave to observe that it supposes I continue unsatisfied: to which I reply, that I no-where say that I continue unsatisfied. I may say, that what is offered for satisfaction, gives none to me or any body elſe; and yet I, as well as other people, may be ſatisfied concerning the matter.

I come now to what your lordſhip ſays poſitively of it.

1. You ſay that I tell you, that "the cauſe why I "continued unſatisfied, is, that the author mentioned "went upon this ground, that clear and diſtinct ideas "are neceſſary to certainty; but that is not my notion "of certainty by ideas," &c.

To which I crave leave to reply, that neither in that part of my ſecond letter, which your lordſhip quotes for it, nor any where elſe, did I tell your lordſhip any ſuch thing. Neither could I aſſign that author's going upon that ground, there mentioned, as any cauſe of diſſatisfaction to me; becauſe I know not "that he went "upon this ground, that clear and diſtinct ideas are "neceſſary to certainty:" for I have met with nothing produced by your lordſhip out of him, to prove that he did ſo. And if it be true, that he goes upon grounds of certainty that are not mine, I know no-body that ought to be diſſatisfied with it but your lordſhip, who have taken ſo much pains to make his grounds mine, and my grounds his, and to intitle us both to what each has ſaid apart.

2. Your lordſhip ſays, "this is no more than what "I had ſaid before in my former letter." Anſw. For this I appeal to the 57th, or rather (as I think you writ) 87th page, quoted for it by your lordſhip; where any one muſt have very good eyes, to find all that is ſet down here in this anſwer (as you a little lower call it) which you have been pleaſed to put into my mouth. For neither in the one nor the other of thoſe pages, is there any ſuch anſwer of mine. Indeed, in the 87th page there are theſe words; "that certainty, in my opinion, "lies in the perception of the agreement or diſagree-"ment of ideas, ſuch as they are, and not always in "the having perfectly clear and diſtinct ideas." But theſe words there are not given as an anſwer to this queſtion, why do I continue ſo unſatisfied? And the remarkable anſwer ſet down is, as I take it, more than theſe theſe words, as much more in proportion as your lordſhip's whole letter is, more than the half of it.

3. Your lordſhip ſays of the remarkable anſwer above ſet down, that " you took particular notice of " it."

To which I crave leave to reply, that your lordſhip, no-where before took notice of this anſwer, as you call it; for it was no-where before extant, though it be true ſome part of the words of it were. But ſome part of the words of this anſwer (which too were never given as an anſwer to the queſtion propoſed) can never be this anſwer itſelf.

4. Your lordſhip farther ſays, that " you gave three " ſeveral anſwers to it."

To which I muſt crave leave further to reply, that never any one of the three anſwers, which you here ſay you gave to this my anſwer, were given to this anſwer: which, in the words above ſet down, you made me give to your queſtion, why I continued ſo unſatisfied?

To juſtify this my reply, there needs no more but to ſet down theſe your lordſhip's three anſwers, and to turn to the places where you ſay you gave them.

The firſt of your three anſwers is this, " that thoſe " who offer at clear and diſtinct ideas, bid much fairer " for certainty than I do (according to this anſwer) " and ſpeak more agreeably to my original grounds of " certainty." The place you quote for this, is, Anſ. 1. p. 80, but in that place it is not given as an anſwer to my ſaying, that " the cauſe, why I continue unſatisfied, " is, that the author mentioned went upon this ground, " that clear and diſtinct ideas are neceſſary to certainty, " but," &c. And if it be given for anſwer to it here, it ſeems a very ſtrange one. For I am ſuppoſed to ſay, that " the cauſe why I continue unſatisfied, is, that " the author mentioned went upon a ground different " from mine:" and to ſatisfy me, I am told his way is better than mine; which cannot but be thought an anſwer very likely to ſatisfy me.

Your ſecond anſwer, which you ſay you gave to that remarkable paſſage above ſet down, is this; " that it " is very poſſible the author of Chriſtianity not myſe-

" rious, might miſtake or miſapply my notions; but " there is too much reaſon to believe he thought them " the ſame, and we have no reaſon to be ſorry that he " hath given me this occaſion for the explaining my " meaning, and for the vindication of myſelf in the " matters I apprehend he had charged me with:" and for this you quote your firſt letter, p. 36. But neither are theſe words in that place an anſwer to my ſaying, " that the cauſe why I continued diſſatisfied, is, that " that author went upon this ground, that clear and " diſtinct ideas are neceſſary to certainty, but, &c."

Your third anſwer, which you ſay you gave to that paſſage above ſet down, is, " that my own grounds of " certainty tend to ſcepticiſm, and that, in an age " wherein the myſteries of faith are too much expoſed " by the promoters of ſcepticiſm and infidelity, it is a " thing of dangerous conſequence to ſtart ſuch new " methods of certainty, as are apt to leave men's minds " more doubtful than before:" For this you refer your reader to your firſt letter. But I muſt crave leave alſo to obſerve, that theſe words are not all to be found in that place, and thoſe of them which are there, are by no means an anſwer to my ſaying, " that the cauſe " why I continue unſatisfied is," &c.

What the words which your lordſhip has here ſet down as your three anſwers, are brought in for in thoſe three places quoted by your lordſhip, any one that will conſult them may ſee; it would hold me too long in perſonal matter to explain that here, and therefore for your lordſhip's ſatisfaction I paſs by thoſe particulars. But this I crave leave to be poſitive in, that in neither of them, they are given in reply to that which is above ſet down, as my anſwer to your lordſhip's queſtion, " for what cauſe do I continue ſo unſatisfied?" Though your lordſhip here ſays, that to this anſwer they were given as a reply, and it was it you had taken notice of, and given theſe three ſeveral replies to. As anſwers therefore to what you make me ſay here, viz. " that " the cauſe of my continuing unſatisfied, is, that the " author mentioned went upon a ground of certainty " that is none of mine;" I cannot conſider them. For

to

to this neither of them is given as an anſwer; though this and it, in ordinary conſtruction, make them have that reference. But theſe are ſome of your privileged particles, and may be applied how and to what you pleaſe.

But though neither of theſe paſſages be any manner of anſwer to what your lordſhip calls them anſwers to; yet you laying ſuch ſtreſs on them, that well nigh half your letter, as I take it, is ſpent in the defence of them; it is fit I conſider what you ſay under each of them.

I ſay, as I take it, near half your letter is in defence of theſe three paſſages.

One reaſon why I ſpeak ſo doubtfully, is, that though you ſay here, "that you will lay them together, and "defend them," and that in effect all that is ſaid to that part is ranged under theſe three heads; yet they being brought in as anſwers to what I am made to ſay, is "the cauſe why I continued unſatisfied," I ſhould ſcarce think your lordſhip ſhould ſpend ſo many pages in this perſonal matter, after you had but two or three pages before ſo openly blamed me for ſpending a leſs number of pages in my anſwer, concerning perſonal matters, to what your lordſhip had in your letter concerning them.

Another reaſon why I ſpeak ſo doubtfully, is, becauſe I do not ſee how theſe three paſſages need ſo long, or any defences, where they are not attacked; or if they be attacked, methinks the defences of them ſhould have been applied to the anſwers I had made to them; or if I have made none, and they be of ſuch moment that they require anſwers, your lordſhip's minding me that they did ſo, would either, by my continued ſilence, have left to your lordſhip all that you can pretend to for my granting them, or elſe my anſwers to them have given your lordſhip an occaſion to defend them, and perhaps to have defended them otherwiſe than you have done. This is certain, that theſe defences had come time enough when they had been attacked, and then it would have been ſeen, whether what was ſaid did defend them or no. The truth is, my lord, if you will give me leave to ſpeak my thoughts freely, when I conſider theſe three, as I call them, anſwers, how they themſelves are brought in, and what relation that which is brought under each of them has to them, and to the matter in queſtion; methinks they look rather like texts choſen to be diſcourſed on, than as anſwers to be defended in a controverſy. For the connexion of that which in train is tacked on to them, is ſuch that makes me ſee I am wholly miſtaken in what I thought the eſtabliſhed rule of controverſy. This was alſo another reaſon why I ſaid you ſpent, as I take it, near half of your letter in defence of them. For when I conſider how one thing hangs on another, under the third anſwer, where I think that which you call your defending it ends; it is a hard matter by the relation and dependency of the parts of that diſcourſe, to tell where it ends.

give

But to conſider the paſſages themſelves, and the defence of them.

That which you call your firſt anſwer, and which you ſay you will defend, is in theſe words; "thoſe who "offer at clear and diſtinct ideas, bid much fairer for "certainty than I do (according to this anſwer) and "ſpeak more agreeably to my original grounds of cer-"tainty." Theſe words being brought in at firſt as a reply to what was called my anſwer, but was not my anſwer, as may be ſeen, Lett. 1. I took no notice of them in my ſecond letter, as being nothing at all to the point in hand; and therefore what need they have of a farther defence, when nothing is objected to them, I do not ſee. To what purpoſe is it to ſpend ſeven or eight pages to ſhow, that another's notion about certainty is better than mine; when that tends not to ſhow how your ſaying, "that the certainty of my proof of a God "is not placed upon any clear and diſtinct ideas, but "upon the force of reaſon diſtinct from it," concerns me; which was the thing there to be ſhown, as is viſible to any one who will vouchſafe to look into that part of my firſt letter. And indeed why ſhould your lordſhip trouble yourſelf to prove, which of two different ways of certainty by ideas is beſt, when you have ſo ill an opinion opinion of the whole way of certainty by ideas, that you accuse it of tendency to scepticism? But it seems your lordship is resolved to have all the faults in my book cleared or corrected, and so you go on to defend these words: "that those who offer at clear and distinct "ideas, bid much fairer for certainty than I do." I could have wished that your lordship had pleased a little to explain them, before you had defended them; for they are not, to me, without some obscurity. However, to guess as well as I can, I think the proposition that you intend here, is this, that those who place certainty in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of only clear and distinct ideas, are more in the right than I am, who place it in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of ideas, such as we have, though they be not in all their parts perfectly clear and distinct.

Whether your lordship has proved this, or no, will be seen when we come to consider what you have said in the defence of it. In the mean time, I have no reason to be sorry to hear your lordship say so; because this supposes, that certainty can be attained by the perception of the agreement or disagreement of clear and distinct ideas. For if certainty cannot be attained by the perception of the agreement or disagreement of clear and distinct ideas, how can they be more in the right, who place certainty in one sort of ideas, that it cannot be had in, than those who place it in another sort of ideas, that it cannot be had in?

I shall proceed now to examine what your lordship has said in defence of the proposition you have here set down to defend, which you may be sure I shall with all the favourableness that truth will allow; since if your lordship makes it out to be true, it puts an end to the dispute you have had with me. For it confutes that main proposition, which you have so much contended for; "that to lay all foundation of certainty, as to "matters of faith, upon clear and distinct ideas, does "certainly overthrow all mysteries of faith:" unless you will say, that mysteries of faith cannot consist with what you have proved to be true.

To

To prove that they are more in the right than I, who place certainty in the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of clear and diſtinct ideas only, your lordſhip ſays, " that it is a wonderful thing, in point of " reaſon, for me to pretend to certainty by ideas, and " not allow theſe ideas to be clear and diſtinct." This, my lord, looks as if I placed certainty only in obſcure and confuſed ideas, and did not allow that it might be had by clear and diſtinct ones. But I have declared myſelf ſo clearly and ſo fully to the contrary, that I doubt not but your lordſhip would think I deſerved to be aſked, whether this were fair and ingenuous dealing, to repreſent this matter as this expreſſion does? But the inſtances are ſo many, how apt my unlearned way of writing is to miſlead your lordſhip, and that always on the ſide leaſt favourable to my ſenſe, that if I ſhould cry out as often as I think I meet with occaſion for it, your lordſhip would have reaſon to be uneaſy at the ebullition and enlarging of my complaints.

Your lordſhip farther aſks, " how can I clearly per- " ceive the agreement or diſagreement of ideas, if I " have not clear and diſtinct ideas? For how is it poſ- " ſible for a man's mind to know whether they agree " or diſagree, if there be ſome parts of thoſe ideas we " have only general and confuſed ideas of?" I would rather read theſe latter words, if your lordſhip pleaſe, " if there be ſome parts of thoſe ideas that are only " general and confuſed;" for " parts of ideas that we " have only general and confuſed ideas of," is not very clear and intelligible to me.

Taking then your lordſhip's queſtion as cleared of this obſcurity, it will ſtand thus: " how is it poſſible " for a man's mind to know, whether ideas agree or " diſagree, if there be ſome parts of thoſe ideas obſcure " and confuſed?" In anſwer to which, I crave leave to aſk; " Is it poſſible for a man's mind to perceive, " whether ideas agree or diſagree, if no parts of thoſe " ideas be obſcure and confuſed," and by that perception to attain certainty? If your lordſhip ſays no: how do you hereby prove, that they who place certainty in the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of only only clear and diſtinct ideas, are more in the right than I? For they who place certainty, where it is impoſſible to be had, can in that be no more in the right, than he who places it in any other impoſſibility? If you ſay yes, certainty may be attained by the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of clear and diſtinct ideas, you give up the main queſtion: you grant the propoſition, which you declare you chiefly oppoſe; and ſo all this great diſpute with me is at an end. Your lordſhip may take which of theſe two you pleaſe; if the former, the propoſition here to be proved is given up; if the latter, the whole controverſy is given up: one of them, it is plain, you muſt ſay.

This, and what your lordſhip ſays farther on this point, ſeems to me to prove nothing, but that you ſuppoſe, that either there are no ſuch things as obſcure and confuſed ideas; and then, with ſubmiſſion, the diſtinction between clear and obſcure, diſtinct and confuſed, is uſeleſs; and it is in vain to talk of clear and obſcure, diſtinct and confuſed ideas, in oppoſition to one another: or elſe your lordſhip ſuppoſes, that an obſcure and confuſed idea is wholly undiſtinguiſhable from all other ideas, and ſo in effect are all other ideas. For if an obſcure and confuſed idea be not one and the ſame with all other ideas, as it is impoſſible for it to be, then the obſcure and confuſed idea may and will be ſo far different from ſome other ideas, that it may be perceived whether it agrees or diſagrees with them or no. For every idea in the mind, clear or obſcure, diſtinct or confuſed, is but that one idea that it is, and not another idea that it is not; and the mind perceives it to be the idea that it is, and not another idea that it is different from.

What therefore I mean by obſcure and confuſed ideas, I have at large ſhown, and ſhall not trouble your lordſhip with a repetition of here. For that there are ſuch obſcure and confuſed ideas, I ſuppoſe the inſtances your lordſhip gives here evince: to which I ſhall add this one more; ſuppoſe you ſhould in the twilight, or in a thick miſt, ſee two things ſtanding upright, near the ſize and ſhape of an ordinary man; but in ſo dim a light, light, or at ſuch a diſtance, that they appeared very much alike, and you could not perceive them to be what they really were, the one a ſtatue, the other a man; would not theſe two be obſcure and confuſed ideas? And yet could not your lordſhip be certain of the truth of this propoſition concerning either of them, that it was ſomething, or did exiſt; and that by perceiving the agreement of that idea (as obſcure and confuſed as it was) with that of exiſtence, as expreſſed in that propoſition.

This, my lord, is juſt the caſe of ſubſtance, upon which you raiſed this argument concerning obſcure and confuſed ideas; which this inſtance ſhows may have propoſitions made about them, of whoſe truth we may be certain.

Hence I crave liberty to conclude, that I am nearer the truth than thoſe who ſay that "certainty is founded "only in clear and diſtinct ideas," if any body does ſay ſo. For no ſuch ſaying of any one of thoſe, with whom your lordſhip joined me for ſo ſaying, is, that I remember, yet produced; though this be that for which "they" and "thoſe", whoever they be, had from your lordſhip the title of the gentlemen of the new way of reaſoning; and this be the opinion which your lordſhip declares "you oppoſe, as certainly overthrowing all "myſteries of faith, and excluding the notion of ſub-"ſtance out of rational diſcourſe." Which terrible termagant propoſition, viz. "that certainty is founded "only in clear and diſtinct ideas," which has made ſuch a noiſe, and been the cauſe of the ſpending above ten times fifty pages, and given occaſion to very large ebullition of thoughts; appears not, by any thing that has been yet produced, to be any where in their writings, with whom upon this ſcore you have had ſo warm a controverſy, but only in your lordſhip's imagination, and what you have, at leaſt for this once, "writ out of "your own thoughts."

But if this paragraph contain ſo little in defence of the propoſition which your lordſhip, in the beginning of it, ſet down on purpoſe to defend; what follows is viſibly more remote from it. But ſince your lordſhip has

has been pleased to tack it on here, though without applying of it any way, that I see, to the defence of the proposition to be defended, which is already got clean out of sight; I am taught, that it is fit I consider it here in this, which your lordship has thought the proper place for it.

In the next paragraph, your lordship is pleased to take notice of this part of my complaint, viz. that I say more than twice or ten times, "that you blame those "who place certainty in clear and distinct ideas, but I "do not; and yet you bring me in amongst them." And for this, your lordship quotes seventeen several pages of my second letter. Whoever will give himself the trouble to turn to those pages, will see how far I am in those places from barely saying, "that you blame "those who place certainty," &c. and what reason you had to point to so many places for my so saying, as a repetition of my complaint. And I believe they will find the proposition about placing certainty only in clear and distinct ideas, is mentioned in them upon several occasions, and to different purposes, as the argument required.

Be that as it will, this is a part of my complaint, and you do me a favour, that after having, as you say, met with it in so many places, you are pleased at last to take notice of it, and promise me a full answer to it. The first part of which full answer is in these words; "that "you do not deny but the first occasion of your lord-"ship's charge, was in the supposition that clear and "distinct ideas were necessary, in order to any cer-"tainty in our minds." And that the only way "to "attain this certainty, was by comparing these ideas "together."

My lord, though I have faithfully set down these words out of my second answer, yet I must own I have printed them in something of a different character from that which they stand in your letter. For your lordship has published this sentence so, as "if the supposi-"tion that clear and distinct ideas were necessary in "order to any certainty in our minds," were my supposition; whereas I must crave leave to let my reader know, know, that that ſuppoſition is purely your lordſhip's: for you neither in your defence of the Trinity, nor in your firſt anſwer, produce any thing to prove, that that was either an aſſertion or ſuppoſition of mine; but your lordſhip was pleaſed to ſuppoſe it for me. As to the latter words, "and that the only way to attain this cer-"tainty, was by comparing theſe ideas together:" If your lordſhip means by theſe ideas, ideas in general; then I acknowledge theſe to be my words, or to be my ſenſe: but then they are not any ſuppoſition in my book, though they are made part of the ſuppoſition here; but their ſenſe is expreſſed in my Eſſay at large in more places than one. But if by theſe ideas your lordſhip means only clear and diſtinct ideas, I crave leave to deny that to be my ſenſe, or any ſuppoſition of mine.

Your lordſhip goes on; "but to prove this;" Prove what, I beſeech you, my lord? That certainty was to be attained by comparing ideas, was a ſuppoſition of mine. To prove that, there needed no words or principles of mine to be produced, unleſs your lordſhip would prove that which was never denied.

But if it were to prove this, viz. that "it was a ſup-"poſition of mine, that clear and diſtinct ideas were "neceſſary to certainty;" and that to prove this to be a ſuppoſition of mine, "my words were produced, and "my principles of certainty laid down, and none elſe;" I anſwer, I do not remember any words or principles of mine produced to ſhow any ground for ſuch a ſuppoſition, that I placed certainty only in clear and diſtinct ideas; and if there had been any ſuch produced, your lordſhip would have done me and the reader a favour to have marked the pages wherein one might have found them produced, unleſs your lordſhip thinks you make amends for quoting ſo many pages of my ſecond letter, which might have been ſpared, by neglecting wholly to quote any of your own where it needed. When your lordſhip ſhall pleaſe to direct me to thoſe places where ſuch words and principles of mine were produced to prove ſuch a ſuppoſition, I ſhall readily turn to them, to ſee how far they do really give ground for it. But my bad memory not ſuggeſting to me any thing like it, your lordship, I hope, will pardon me if I do not turn over your defence of the Trinity and your first letter, to see whether you have any such proofs, which you yourself seem so much to doubt or think so meanly of, that you do not so much as point out the places where they are to be found; though we have in this very page so eminent an example, that you are not sparing of your pains in this kind, where you have the least thought that it might serve your lordship to the meanest purpose.

your

But though you produced no words or principles of mine to prove this a supposition of mine, yet in your next words here your lordship produces a reason why you yourself supposed it. For you say, "you could "not imagine that I could place certainty in the agree- "ment or disagreement of ideas, and not suppose those "ideas to be clear and distinct:" so that at last the satisfaction you give me, why my book was brought into a controversy wherein it was not concerned, is, that your lordship imagined I supposed in it, what I did not suppose in it. And here I crave leave to ask, whether the reader may not well suppose that you had a great mind to bring my book into that controversy, when the only handle you could find for it, was an imagination of a supposition to be in it, which in truth was not there?

Your lordship adds, "that I finding myself joined "in such company which I did not desire to be seen "in, I rather chose to distinguish myself from them, "by denying clear and distinct ideas to be necessary to "certainty."

If it might be permitted to another to guess at your thoughts, as well as you do at mine, he perhaps would turn it thus; that your lordship finding no readier way, as you thought, to set a mark upon my book, than by bringing several passages of it into a controversy concerning the Trinity, wherein they had nothing to do; and speaking of them under the name of "those" and "them," as if your adversaries in that dispute had made use of those passages against the Trinity, when no one opposer of the doctrine of the Trinity, that I know, or that you have produced, ever made uſe of any one of them: you thought fit to jumble my book with other people's opinions after a new way, never uſed by any other writer that I ever heard of. If any one will conſider what your lordſhip has ſaid for my ſatisfaction (wherein you have, as I humbly conceive I have ſhown, produced nothing but imaginations of imaginations, and ſuppoſitions of ſuppoſitions) he will, I conclude, without ſtraining of his thoughts, be carried to this conjecture.

But conjectures apart, your lordſhip ſays, "that I "finding myſelf joined in ſuch company which I did "not deſire to be ſeen in, I rather choſe to diſtinguiſh "myſelf:" if keeping to my book be called diſtinguiſhing myſelf. You ſay, "I rather choſe:" rather! than what, my lord, I beſeech you? Your learned way of writing, I find, is every where beyond my capacity; and unleſs I will gueſs at your meaning (which is not very ſafe) beyond what I can certainly underſtand by your words, I often know not what to anſwer to. It is certain, you mean here, that I preferred "diſtinguiſhing "myſelf from them I found myſelf joined with" to ſomething; but to what, you do not ſay. If you mean to owning that for my notion of certainty, which is not my notion of certainty, this is true; I did and ſhall always rather chooſe to diſtinguiſh myſelf from any of them, than own that for my notion which is not my notion: if you mean that I preferred "my diſtinguiſhing myſelf from them, to my being joined with them;" you make me chooſe, where there neither is nor can be any choice. For what is wholly out of one's power, leaves no room for choice; and I think I ſhould be laughed at, if I ſhould ſay, "I rather chooſe to diſtin-"guiſh myſelf from the papiſts, than that it ſhould "rain." For it is no more in my choice not to be joined, as your lordſhip has been pleaſed to join me, with the unknown "they" and "them," than it is in my power that it ſhould not rain.

It is like you will ſay here again, this is a nice criticiſm; I grant, my lord, it is about words and expreſſions: but ſince I cannot know your meaning but by your your words and expreſſions, if this defect in my underſtanding very frequently overtake me in your writings to and concerning me, it is troubleſome, I confeſs; but what muſt I do? Muſt I play at blind-man's-buff? Catch at what I do not ſee? Anſwer to I know not what; to no meaning, i. e. to nothing? Or muſt I preſume to know your meaning, when I do not?

For example, ſuppoſe I ſhould preſume it to be your meaning here, that I found myſelf joined in company, by your lordſhip, with the author of Chriſtianity not myſterious, by your lordſhip's imputing the ſame notions of certainty to us both; that I did not deſire to be ſeen in his company, i. e. to be thought to be of his opinion in other things; and therefore "I choſe rather "to diſtinguiſh myſelf from him, by denying clear and "diſtinct ideas to be neceſſary to certainty, than to be "ſo joined with him:" if I ſhould preſume this to be the ſenſe of theſe your words here, and that by the doubtful ſignification of the expreſſions of being joined in company and ſeen in company, uſed equivocally, your lordſhip ſhould mean, that becauſe I was ſaid to be of his opinion in one thing, I was to be thought to be of his opinion in all things, and therefore diſowned to be of his opinion in that, wherein I was of his opinion, becauſe I would not be thought of his opinion all through: would not your lordſhip be diſpleaſed with me for ſuppoſing you to have ſuch a meaning as this, and aſk me again, "whether I could think you a man "of ſo little ſenſe to talk thus?" And yet, my lord, this is the beſt I can make of theſe words, which ſeem to me rather to diſcover a ſecret in your way of dealing with me, than any thing in me that I am aſhamed of.

For I am not, nor ever ſhall be aſhamed to own any opinion I have, becauſe another man holds the ſame; and ſo far as that brings me into his company, I ſhall not be troubled to be ſeen in it. But I ſhall never think that that entitles me to any other of his opinions, or makes me of his company in any other ſenſe, how much ſoever that be the deſign: for your lordſhip has uſed no ſmall art and pains to make me of his and the unitarians company in all that they ſay, only becauſe that author has ten lines in the beginning of his book, which agrees with ſomething I have ſaid in mine; from whence we become companions, ſo univerſally united in opinion, that they muſt be entitled to all that I ſay, and I to all that they ſay.

My lord, when I writ my book, I could not deſign "to diſtinguiſh myſelf from the gentlemen of the new "way of reaſoning," who were not then in being, nor are, that I ſee, yet: ſince I find nothing produced out of the unitarians, nor the author of Chriſtianity not myſterious, to ſhow, that they make clear and diſtinct ideas neceſſary to certainty. And all that I have done ſince, has been to ſhow, that you had no reaſon to join my book with men (let them be what "they" or "thoſe" you pleaſe) who founded certainty only upon clear and diſtinct ideas, when my book did not found it only upon clear and diſtinct ideas. And I cannot tell why the appealing to my book now, ſhould be called "a chooſ-"ing rather to diſtinguiſh myſelf."

My reader muſt pardon me here for this uncouth phraſe of joining my book with men. For as your lordſhip ordered the matter (pardon me, if I ſay in your new way of writing) ſo it was, if your own word may be taken in the caſe: for, to give me ſatisfaction, you inſiſt upon this, that you did not join me with thoſe gentlemen in their opinions, but tell me "they uſed my "notions to other purpoſes than I intended them;" and ſo there was no need for me "to diſtinguiſh myſelf "from them," when your lordſhip had done it for me as you plead all along: though you are pleaſed to tell me, that I was joined with them, and that "I found "myſelf joined in ſuch company, as I did not deſire to "be ſeen in."

My lord, I could find myſelf joined in no company upon this occaſion, but what you joined me in. And therefore I beg leave to aſk your lordſhip, did you join me in company with thoſe, in whoſe company, you here ſay, "I do not deſire to be ſeen?" If you own that you did, how muſt I underſtand that paſſage where you ſay, that "you muſt do that right to the ingenious author "of the Eſſay of Human Underſtanding, from whence

" theſe notions were borrowed, to ſerve other purpoſes " than he intended them;" which you repeat again as matter of ſatisfaction to me, and as a proof of the care you took not to be miſunderſtood. If you did join me with them, what is become of all the ſatisfaction in the point, which your lordſhip has been at ſo much pains about? And if you did not join me with them, you could not think I found myſelf joined with them, or choſe to diſtinguiſh myſelf from men I was never joined with: for my book was innocent of what made them gentlemen of the new way of reaſoning.

There ſeems to me ſomething very delicate in this matter. I ſhould be ſuppoſed joined to them, and your lordſhip ſhould not be ſuppoſed to have joined me to them, upon ſo ſlight or no occaſion; and yet all this comes ſolely from your lordſhip. How to do this to your ſatisfaction, I confeſs myſelf to be too dull: and therefore I have been at the pains to examine how far I have this obligation to your lordſhip, and how far you would be pleaſed to own it, that the world might underſtand your lordſhip's, to me, incomprehenſible way of writing on this occaſion.

For if you had a mind, by a new and dexterous way, becoming the learning and caution of a great man, to bring me into ſuch company, which you think " I did " not deſire to be ſeen in;" I thought ſuch a pattern, ſet by ſuch a hand as your lordſhip's, ought not to be loſt by being paſſed over too ſlightly. Beſides, I hope, that you will not take it amiſs, that I was willing to ſee what obligation I had to your lordſhip in the favour you deſigned me. But I crave leave to aſſure your lordſhip, I ſhall never be aſhamed to own any opinion I have, becauſe another man (of whom perhaps your lordſhip or others have no very good thoughts) is of it, nor be unwilling to be ſo far ſeen in his company: though I ſhall always think I have a right to demand, and ſhall deſire to be ſatisfied, why any one makes to himſelf, or takes an occaſion from thence, in a manner that favours not too much of charity, to extend this ſociety to thoſe opinions of that man, with which I have nothing to do; that the world may ſee the juſtice and good-will of ſuch endeavours, and judge whether ſuch arts ſavour not a little of the ſpirit of the inquiſition.

For, if I miſtake not, it is the method of that holy office, and the way of thoſe revered guardians of what they call the chriſtian faith, to raiſe reports or ſtart occaſions of ſuſpicion concerning the orthodoxy of any one they have no very good-will towards, and require him to clear himſelf; gilding all this with the care of religion, and the profeſſion of reſpect and tenderneſs to the perſon himſelf, even when they deliver him up to be burnt by the ſecular power.

I ſhall not, my lord, ſay, that you have had any ill-will to me; for I never deſerved any from you. But I ſhall be better able to anſwer thoſe, who are apt to think the method you have taken, has ſome conformity, ſo far as it has gone, with what proteſtants complain of in the inquiſition; when you ſhall have cleared this matter a little otherwiſe, and aſſigned a more ſufficient reaſon for bringing me into the party of thoſe that oppoſe the doctrine of the Trinity, than only becauſe the author of Chriſtianity not myſterious has, in the beginning of his book, half a ſcore lines which you gueſs he borrowed out of mine. For that, in truth, is all the matter of fact upon which all this duſt is raiſed; and the matter ſo advanced by degrees, that now I am told, "I ſhould "have cleared myſelf, by owning the doctrine of the "Trinity;" as if I had been ever accuſed of diſowning it. But that which ſhows no ſmall ſkill in this management, is, that I am called upon to clear myſelf, by the very ſame perſon who, raiſing the whole diſpute, has himſelf over and over again cleared me; and upon that grounds the ſatisfaction he pretends to give me and others, in anſwer to my complaint of his having, without any reaſon at all, brought my book into the controverſy concerning the Trinity. But to go on.

If the preceding part of this paragraph had nothing in it of defence of this propoſition, "that thoſe who "offer at clear and diſtinct ideas, bid much fairer for "certainty than I do," &c. it is certain, that what follows is altogether as remote from any ſuch defence.

Your

Your lordſhip ſays, "that certainty by ſenſe, cer"tainty by reaſon, and certainty by remembrance, are "to be diſtinguiſhed from the certainty" under debate, and to be ſhut out from it: and upon this you ſpend three pages. Suppoſing it ſo, how does this at all tend to the defence of this propoſition, that "thoſe who "offer at clear and diſtinct ideas, bid much fairer for "certainty than I do?" For whether certainty by ſenſe, by reaſon, and by remembrance, be or be not comprehended in the certainty under debate, this propoſition, "that thoſe who offer at clear and diſtinct ideas, bid "much fairer for certainty than I do," will not at all be confirmed or invalidated thereby.

The proving therefore, that "certainty by ſenſe, by "reaſon, and by remembrance," is to be excluded from the certainty under debate, ſerving nothing to the defence of the propoſition to be defended, and ſo having nothing to do here; let us now conſider it as a propoſition that your lordſhip has a mind to prove, as ſerving to ſome other great purpoſe of your own, or perhaps in ſome other view againſt my book: for you ſeem to lay no ſmall ſtreſs upon it, by your way of introducing it. For you very ſolemnly ſet yourſelf to prove, "that the "certainty under debate is the certainty of knowledge, "and that a propoſition whoſe ideas are to be compared "as to their agreement or diſagreement, is the proper "object of this certainty." From whence your lordſhip infers, that "therefore this certainty is to be diſ-"tinguiſhed from a certainty by ſenſe, by reaſon, and "by remembrance." But by what logic this is inferred, is not eaſy to me to diſcover. For "if a propoſi-"tion, whoſe ideas are to be compared as to their agree-"ment or diſagreement, be the proper object of the "certainty" under debate; if propoſitions whoſe certainty we arrive at by ſenſe, reaſon, or remembrance, be of ideas, which may be compared as to their agreement or diſagreement; then they cannot be excluded from that certainty, which is to be had by ſo comparing thoſe ideas: unleſs they muſt be ſhut out for the very ſame reaſon that others are taken in.

1. Then as to certainty by ſenſe, or propoſitions of that kind:

" The object of the certainty under debate, your " lordſhip owns, is a propoſition whoſe ideas are to be " compared as to their agreement or diſagreement." The agreement or diſagreement of the ideas of a propoſition to be compared, may be examined and perceived by ſenſe, and is certainty by ſenſe: and therefore how this certainty is to be diſtinguiſhed and ſhut out from that, which conſiſts in the perceiving the agreement or diſagreement of the ideas of any propoſition, will not be eaſy to ſhow; unleſs one certainty is diſtinguiſhed from another, by having that which makes the other to be certainty, viz. the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of two ideas, as expreſſed in that propoſition: v. g. may I not be certain, that a ball of ivory that lies before my eyes is not ſquare? And is it not my ſenſe of ſeeing, that makes me perceive the diſagreement of that ſquare figure to that round matter, which are the ideas expreſſed in that propoſition? How then is certainty by ſenſe excluded or diſtinguiſhed from that knowledge, which conſiſts in the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of ideas?

2. Your lordſhip diſtinguiſhes the certainty which conſiſts in the perceiving the agreement or diſagreement of ideas, as expreſſed in any propoſition, from certainty by reaſon. To have made good this diſtinction, I humbly conceive, you would have done well to have ſhowed that the agreement or diſagreement of two ideas could not be perceived by the intervention of a third, which I, and as I gueſs other people, call reaſoning, or knowing by reaſon. As for example, cannot the ſides of a given triangle be known to be equal by the intervention of two circles, whereof one of theſe ſides is a common radius?

To which, it is like, your lordſhip will anſwer, what I find you do here, about the knowledge of the exiſtence of ſubſtance, by the intervention of the exiſtence of modes, " that you grant one may come to certainty " of knowledge in the caſe; but not a certainty by ideas, " but by a conſequence of reaſon deduced from the " ideas

" ideas we have by our ſenſes." This, my lord, you have ſaid, and thus you have more than once oppoſed reaſon and ideas as inconſiſtent; which I ſhould be very glad to ſee proved once, after theſe ſeveral occaſions I have given your lordſhip, by excepting againſt that ſuppoſition. But ſince the word idea has the ill luck to be ſo conſtantly oppoſed by your lordſhip to reaſon, permit me if you pleaſe, inſtead of it, to put what I mean by it, viz. the immediate objects of the mind in thinking (for that is it which I would ſignify by the word ideas) and then let us ſee how your anſwer will run. You grant, that from the ſenſible modes of bodies, we may come to a certain knowledge, that there are bodily ſubſtances; but this you ſay is not a certainty by the immediate objects of the mind in thinking, " but by a con-
" ſequence of reaſon deduced from the immediate ob" jects of the mind in thinking, which we have by our
" ſenſes." When you can prove that we can have a certainty by a conſequence of reaſon, which certainty ſhall not alſo be by the immediate objects of the mind in uſing its reaſon; you may ſay ſuch certainty is not by ideas, but by conſequence of reaſon. But that I believe will not be, till you can ſhow, that the mind can think, or reaſon, or know, without immediate objects of thinking, reaſoning, or knowing; all which objects, as your lordſhip knows, I call ideas.

You ſubjoin, " and this can never prove that we have " certainty by ideas, where the ideas themſelves are " not clear and diſtinct." The queſtion is not " whe" ther we can have certainty by ideas that are not clear
" and diſtinct?" or whether my words (if by the particle this you mean my words ſet down in the foregoing page) prove any ſuch thing, which I humbly conceive they do not: but whether certainty by reaſon be excluded from the certainty under debate? which I humbly conceive you have not from my words, or any other way, proved.

3. The third ſort of propoſitions that your lordſhip excludes, are thoſe whoſe certainty we know by remembrance: but in theſe two the agreement or diſagreement of the ideas contained in them is perceived; not always indeed, indeed, as it was at firſt, by an actual view of the connexion of all the intermediate ideas, whereby the agreement or diſagreement of thoſe in the propoſition was at firſt perceived; but by other intermediate ideas, that ſhow the agreement or diſagreement of the ideas contained in the propoſition, whoſe certainty we remember.

As in the inſtance you here make uſe of, viz. that the three angles of a triangle are equal to two right ones: the certainty of which propoſition we know by remembrance, "though the demonſtration hath ſlipt out of "our minds;" but we know it in a different way from what your lordſhip ſuppoſes. The agreement of the two ideas, as joined in that propoſition, is perceived; but it is by the intervention of other ideas than thoſe which at firſt produced that perception. I remember, i. e. I know (for remembrance is but the reviving of ſome paſt knowledge) that I was once certain of the truth of this propoſition, that the three angles of a triangle are equal to two right ones. The immutability of the ſame relations between the ſame immutable things, is now the idea that ſhows me, that if the three angles of a triangle were once equal to two right ones, they will always be equal to two right ones; and hence I come to be certain, that what was once true in the caſe, is always true; what ideas once agreed, will always agree; and conſequently what I once knew to be true, I ſhall always know to be true as long as I can remember that I once knew it.

Your lordſhip ſays, "that the debate between us is "about certainty of knowledge, with regard to ſome "propoſition whoſe ideas are to be compared as to their "agreement or diſagreement:" out of this debate, you ſay, certainty by ſenſe, by reaſon, and by remembrance, is to be excluded. I deſire you then, my lord, to tell what ſort of propoſitions will be within the debate, and to name me one of them; if propoſitions, whoſe certainty we know by ſenſe, reaſon, or remembrance, are excluded.

However, from what you have ſaid concerning them, your lordſhip in the next paragraph concludes them out of

of the question; your words are, "these things then "being out of the question."

Out of what question, I beseech you, my lord? The question here, and that of your own proposing to be defended in the affirmative, is this, "whether those who "offer at clear and distinct ideas bid much fairer for "certainty than I do?" And how certainty by sense, by reason, and by remembrance comes to have any particular exception in reference to this question, it is my misfortune not to be able to find.

But your lordship, leaving the examination of the question under debate, by a new state of the question, would pin upon me what I never said. Your words are, "these things then being put out of the question, "which belong not to it; the question truly stated is, "whether we can attain to any certainty of knowledge "as to the truth of a proposition in the way of ideas, "where the ideas themselves, by which we came to "that certainty, be not clear and distinct." With submission, my lord, that which I say in the point, is, that we may be certain of the truth of a proposition concerning an idea which is not in all its parts clear and distinct; and therefore if your lordship will have any question with me concerning this matter, "the question "truly stated is, whether we can frame any proposition "concerning a thing whereof we have but an obscure "and confused idea, of whose truth we can be certain?"

That this is the question, you will easily agree, when you will give yourself the trouble to look back to the rise of it.

Your lordship having found out a strange sort of men, who had broached "a doctrine which supposed that we "must have clear and distinct ideas of whatever we "pretend to a certainty of in our minds," was pleased for this to call them "the gentlemen of a new way of "reasoning," and to make me one of them. I answered, that I placed not certainty only in clear and distinct ideas, and so ought not to have been made one of them, being not guilty of what made "a gentleman "of this new way of reasoning." It is pretended still, that I am guilty; and endeavoured to be proved. To know know now whether I am or no, it muſt be conſidered what you lay to their charge, as the conſequence of that opinion; and that is, that upon this ground "we can-"not come to any certainty that there is ſuch a thing "as ſubſtance." This appears by more places than one. Your lordſhip aſks, "how is it poſſible that we "may be certain that there are both bodily and ſpiri-"tual ſubſtances, if our reaſon depend upon clear and "diſtinct ideas?" And again, "how come we to be "certain that there are ſpiritual ſubſtances in the world, "ſince we can have no clear and diſtinct ideas con-"cerning them?" And your lordſhip having ſet down ſome words out of my book, as if they were inconſiſtent with my principle of certainty founded only in clear and diſtinct ideas, you ſay, "from whence it follows that "we may be certain of the being of a ſpiritual ſubſtance, "though we have no clear and diſtinct ideas of it."

Other places might be produced, but theſe are enough to ſhow, that thoſe who held clear and diſtinct ideas neceſſary to certainty, were accuſed to extend it thus far, that where any idea was obſcure and confuſed, there no propoſition could be made concerning it, of whoſe truth we could be certain; v. g. we could not be certain that there was in the world ſuch a thing as ſubſtance, becauſe we had but an obſcure and confuſed idea of it.

In this ſenſe therefore I denied that clear and diſtinct ideas were neceſſary to certainty, v. g. I denied it to be my doctrine, that where an idea was obſcure and confuſed, there no propoſition could be made concerning it, of whoſe truth we could be certain. For I held we might be certain of the truth of this propoſition, that there was ſubſtance in the world, though we have but an obſcure and confuſed idea of ſubſtance: and your lordſhip endeavoured to prove we could not, as may be ſeen at large in that 10th chapter of your Vindication, &c.

From all which, it is evident, that the queſtion between us truly ſtated is this, whether we can attain certainty of the truth of a propoſition concerning any thing whereof we have but an obſcure and confuſed idea?

This

This being the queſtion, the firſt thing you ſay, is, that Des Cartes was of your opinion againſt me. Anſ. If the queſtion were to be decided by authority, I had rather it ſhould be by your lordſhip's than Des Cartes's: and therefore I ſhould excuſe myſelf to you, as not having needed, that you ſhould have added his authority to yours, to ſhame me into a ſubmiſſion; or that you ſhould have been at the pains to have tranſcribed ſo much out of him, for my ſake, were it fit for me to hinder the diſplay of the riches of your lordſhip's univerſal reading; wherein I doubt not but I ſhould take pleaſure myſelf, if I had it to ſhow.

I come therefore to what I think your lordſhip principally aimed at; which, as I humbly conceive, was to ſhow out of my book, that I founded certainty only on clear and diſtinct ideas. " And yet, as you ſay, I " have complained of your lordſhip in near twenty " places of my ſecond letter, charging this upon me. " By this the world will judge of the juſtice of my " complaints, and the conſiſtency of my notion of " ideas."

Anſw. What " conſiſtency of my notion of ideas" has to do here, I know not; for I do not remember that I made any complaint concerning that. But ſuppoſing my complaints were ill-grounded in this one caſe concerning certainty, yet they might be reaſonable in other points; and therefore, with ſubmiſſion, I humbly conceive the inference was a little too large, to conclude from this particular againſt my complaint in general.

In the next place I anſwer, that ſuppoſing the places which your lordſhip brings out of my book did prove what they do not, viz. that I founded certainty only in clear and diſtinct ideas, yet my complaints in the caſe are very juſt. For your lordſhip at firſt brought me into the controverſy, and made me one of " the gen- " tlemen of the new way of reaſoning," for founding all certainty on clear and diſtinct ideas, only upon a bare ſuppoſition that I did ſo; which I think your lordſhip confeſſes in theſe words, where you ſay, " that " you do not deny but the firſt occaſion of your charge,

" was

" was the ſuppoſition that clear and diſtinct ideas were " neceſſary in order to any certainty in our minds; " and that the only way to attain this certainty, was " the comparing theſe, i. e. clear and diſtinct ideas, " together: but to prove this, my words, your lord- " ſhip ſays, were produced, and my principles of cer- " tainty laid down, and none elſe." Anſw. It is ſtrange, that when my principles of certainty were laid down, this (if I held it) was not found among them. Having looked therefore, I do not find in that place, that any words or principles of mine were produced to prove that I held, that the only way to attain certainty, was by comparing only clear and diſtinct ideas; ſo that all that then made me one of the gentlemen of the new way of reaſoning, was only your ſuppoſing that I ſuppoſed that clear and diſtinct ideas are neceſſary to certainty. And therefore I had then, and have ſtill, reaſon to complain, that your lordſhip brought me into this controverſy upon ſo ſlight grounds, which I humbly conceive will always ſhow it to have proceeded not ſo much from any thing you had then found in my book, as from a great willingneſs in your lordſhip at any rate to do it; and of this the paſſages which you have here now produced out of my Eſſay, are an evident proof.

For if your lordſhip had then known any thing that ſeemed ſo much to your purpoſe, " when you pro- " duced, as you ſay, my words and my principles to " prove," that I held clear and diſtinct ideas neceſſary to certainty; it cannot be believed that you would have omitted theſe paſſages, either then or in your anſwer to my firſt letter, and deferred them to this your anſwer to my ſecond. Theſe paſſages therefore now quoted here by your lordſhip, give me leave, my lord, to ſuppoſe have been by a new and diligent ſearch found out, and are now at laſt brought " poſt factum" to give ſome colour to your way of proceeding with me; though theſe paſſages being, as I ſuppoſe, then unknown to you, they could not be the ground of making me one of thoſe who place certainty only in clear and diſtinct ideas.

Let

Let us come to the passages themselves, and see what help they afford you.

The first words you set down out of my Essay are these; "the mind not being certain of the "truth of that it doth not evidently "know." From these words, that which I infer in that place is, "that therefore the mind is "bound in such cases to give up its assent to an "erring testimony." But your lordship from them infers here, "therefore I make clear ideas necessary to "certainty;" or therefore, by considering the immediate objects of the mind in thinking, we cannot be certain that substance (whereof we have an obscure and confused idea) doth exist. I shall leave your lordship to make good this consequence when you think fit, and proceed to the next passage you allege, which you say proves it more plainly. I believe it will be thought it should be proved more plainly, or else it will not be proved at all. B. iv. c. 18. § 8.

This plainer proof is out of B. iv. c. 4. § 8. in these words, "that which is requisite to make our know-"ledge certain, is the clearness of our ideas." Answ. The certainty here spoken of, is the certainty of general propositions in morality, and not of the particular existence of any thing; and therefore tends not at all to any such position as this, that we cannot be certain of the existence of any particular sort of being, though we have but an obscure and confused idea of it: though it doth affirm, that we cannot have any certain perception of the relations of general moral ideas (wherein consists the certainty of general moral propositions) any farther than those ideas are clear in our minds. And that this is so, I refer my reader to that chapter for satisfaction.

The third place produced by your lordship out of B. iv. c. 12. § 14. is, "for it being evident that our "knowledge cannot exceed our ideas; where they are "either imperfect, confused, or obscure, we cannot "expect to have certain, perfect, or clear knowledge." To understand these words aright, we must see in what place they stand; and that is in a chapter of the improvement of our knowledge, and therein are brought as a reaſon to ſhow how neceſſary it is " for the en- " larging of our knowledge, to get and ſettle in our " minds, as far as we can, clear, diſtinct, and conſtant " ideas of thoſe things we would conſider and know." The reaſon whereof there given, is this; that as far as they are either imperfect, confuſed, or obſcure, we cannot expect to have certain, perfect, or clear knowledge; i. e. that our knowledge will not be clear and certain ſo far as the idea is imperfect and obſcure. Which will not at all reach your lordſhip's purpoſe, who would argue, that becauſe I ſay our idea of ſubſtance is obſcure and confuſed, therefore upon my grounds, we cannot know that ſuch a thing as ſubſtance exiſts; becauſe I placed certainty only in clear and diſtinct ideas. Now to this I anſwered, that I did not place all certainty only on clear and diſtinct ideas, in ſuch a ſenſe as that; and therefore to avoid being miſtaken, I ſaid, " that my notion of certainty by ideas " is, that certainty conſiſts in the perception of the " agreement or diſagreement of ideas; ſuch as we " have, whether they be in all their parts perfectly " clear and diſtinct or no:" viz. if they are clear and diſtinct enough to be capable of having their agreement or diſagreement with any other idea perceived, ſo far they are capable of affording us knowledge, though at the ſame time they are ſo obſcure and confuſed, as that there are other ideas, with which we can by no means ſo compare them, as to perceive their agreement or diſagreement with them. This was the clearneſs and diſtinctneſs which I denied to be neceſſary to certainty.

If your lordſhip would have done me the honour to have conſidered what I underſtood by obſcure and confuſed ideas, and what every one muſt underſtand by them, who thinks clearly and diſtinctly concerning them, I am apt to imagine you would have ſpared yourſelf the trouble of raiſing this queſtion, and omitted theſe quotations out of my book, as not ſerving to your lordſhip's purpoſe.

The fourth paſſage, which you ſeem to lay moſt ſtreſs on, proves as little to your purpoſe as either of the former former three: the words are these; "but obscure and "confused ideas can never produce any clear and cer- "tain knowledge, because as far as any ideas are con- "fused or obscure, the mind can never perceive clearly "whether they agree or no." The latter part of these words are a plain interpretation of the former, and show their meaning to be this, viz. our obscure and confused ideas, as they stand in contradistinction to clear and distinct, have all of them something in them, whereby they are kept from being wholly imperceptible and perfectly confounded with all other ideas, and so their agreement or disagreement, with at least some other ideas, may be perceived, and thereby produce certainty, though they are obscure and confused ideas. But so far as they are obscure and confused, so that their agreement or disagreement cannot be perceived, so far they cannot produce certainty; v. g. the idea of substance is clear and distinct enough to have its agreement with that of actual existence perceived: but yet it is so far obscure and confused, that there be a great many other ideas, with which, by reason of its obscurity and confusedness, we cannot compare it so, as to produce such a perception; and in all those cases we necessarily come short of certainty. And that this was so, and that I meant so, I humbly conceive you could not but have seen, if you had given yourself the trouble to re- flect on that passage which you quoted, viz. "that "certainty consists in the perception of the agree- "ment or disagreement of ideas, such as we have, "whether they be in all their parts perfectly clear "and distinct or no." To which, what your lord- ship has here brought out of the second book of my Essay, is no manner of contradiction; unless it be a contradiction to say, that an idea, which cannot be well compared with some ideas, from which it is not clearly and sufficiently distinguishable, is yet capa- ble of having its agreement or disagreement perceived with some other idea, with which it is not so con- founded, but that it may be compared: and therefore I had, and have still reason to complain of your lordship, for charging that upon me, which I never ſaid nor meant.

To make this yet more viſible, give me leave to make uſe of an inſtance in the object of the eyes in ſeeing, from whence the metaphor of obſcure and confuſed is transferred to ideas, the objects of the mind in thinking. There is no object which the eye ſees, that can be ſaid to be perfectly obſcure, for then it would not be ſeen at all; nor perfectly confuſed, for then it could not be diſtinguiſhed from any other, no not from a clearer. For example, one ſees in the duſk ſomething of that ſhape and ſize, that a man in that degree of light and diſtance would appear. This is not ſo obſcure, that he ſees nothing; nor ſo confuſed, that he cannot diſtinguiſh it from a ſteeple or a ſtar; but is ſo obſcure, that he cannot, though it be a ſtatue, diſtinguiſh it from a man; and therefore, in regard of a man, it can produce no clear and diſtinct knowledge: but yet as obſcure and confuſed an idea as it is, this hinders not but that there may many propoſitions be made concerning it, as particularly that it exiſts, of the truth of which we may be certain. And that without any contradiction to what I ſay in my Eſſay, viz. "that ob-"ſcure and confuſed ideas can never produce any clear "and certain knowledge; becauſe as far as they are "confuſed or obſcure, the mind cannot perceive clearly "whether they agree or no." This reaſon that I there give plainly limiting it only to knowledge, where the obſcurity and confuſion is ſuch, that it hinders the perception of agreement or diſagreement, which is not ſo great in any obſcure and confuſed idea, but that there are ſome other ideas, with which it may be perceived to agree or diſagree, and there it is capable to produce certainty in us.

And thus I am come to the end of your defence of your firſt anſwer, as you call it, and deſire the reader to conſider how much, in the eight pages employed in it, is ſaid to defend this propoſition, "that thoſe who "offer at clear and diſtinct ideas, bid much fairer for "certainty than I do?"

But

But your lordship having, under this head, taken occasion to examine my making clear and distinct ideas necessary to certainty, I crave leave to consider here what you say of it in another place. I find one argument more to prove, that I place certainty only in clear and distinct ideas. Your lordship tells me, and bids me observe my own words, that I positively say, "that "the mind not being certain of the truth of that it "doth not evidently know: so that, says your lord-"ship, it is plain here, that I place certainty in evident "knowledge, or in clear and distinct ideas, and yet "my great complaint of your lordship was, that you "charged this upon me, and now you find it in my "own words." Answer. I do observe my own words, but do not find in them "or in clear and distinct "ideas," though your lordship has set these down as my words. I there indeed say, "the mind is not cer-"tain of what it does not evidently know." Whereby I place certainty, as your lordship says, only in evident knowledge; but evident knowledge may be had in the clear and evident perception of the agreement or dis-agreement of ideas, though some of them should not be in all their parts perfectly clear and distinct, as is evident in this proposition, "that substance does exist."

But you give not off this matter so: for these words of mine above quoted by your lordship, viz. "it being "evident that our knowledge cannot exceed our ideas, "where they are imperfect, confused, or obscure, we "cannot expect to have certain, perfect, or clear know-"ledge;" your lordship has here up again: and there-upon charge it on me as a contradiction, that confessing our ideas to be imperfect, confused, and obscure, I say I do not yet place certainty in clear and distinct ideas. Answer. The reason is plain, for I do not say that all our ideas are imperfect, confused, and obscure; nor that obscure and confused ideas are in all their parts so ob-scure and confused, that no agreement or disagreement between them and any other idea can be perceived; and therefore my confession of imperfect, obscure, and confused ideas takes not away all knowledge, even con-cerning those very ideas.

But, says your lordship, " can certainty be had with " imperfect and obscure ideas, and yet no certainty be " had by them?" Add if you please, my lord [by those parts of them which are obscure and confused:] and then the question will be right put, and have this easy answer: Yes, my lord; and that without any contradiction, because an idea that is not in all its parts perfectly clear and distinct, and is therefore an obscure and confused idea, may yet with those ideas, with which, by any obscurity it has, it is not confounded, be capable to produce knowledge by the perception of its agreement or disagreement with them. And yet it will hold true, that in that part wherein it is imperfect, obscure, and confused, we cannot expect to have certain, perfect, or clear knowledge.

For example: he that has the idea of a leopard, as only of a spotted animal, must be confessed to have but a very imperfect, obscure, and confused idea of that species of animals; and yet this obscure and confused idea is capable by a perception of the agreement or disagreement of the clear part of it, viz. that of animal, with several other ideas, to produce certainty: though as far as the obscure part of it confounds it with the idea of a lynx, or other spotted animal, it can, joined with them, in many propositions, produce no knowledge.

This might easily be understood to be my meaning by these words, which your lordship quotes out of my Essay, viz. " that our knowledge consisting in the per- " ception of the agreement or disagreement of any " two ideas, its clearness or obscurity consists in the " clearness or obscurity of that perception, and not in " the clearness or obscurity of the ideas themselves." Upon which your lordship asks, " how is it possible " for the mind to have a clear perception of the agree- " ment of ideas, if the ideas themselves be not clear " and distinct?" Ans. Just as the eyes can have a clear perception of the agreement or disagreement of the clear and distinct parts of a writing, with the clear parts of another, though one, or both of them, be so obscure and blurred in other parts, that the eye cannot perceive perceive any agreement or diſagreement they have one with another. And I am ſorry that theſe words of mine, " my notion of certainty by ideas, is, that cer- " tainty conſiſts in the perception of the agreement or " diſagreement of ideas, ſuch as we have, whether " they be in all their parts perfectly clear and diſtinct " or no;" were not plain enough to make your lord- ſhip underſtand my meaning, and ſave you all this new, and, as it ſeems to me, needleſs trouble.

In your 15th page, your lordſhip comes to your ſecond of the three anſwers, which you ſay you had given, and would lay together and defend.

You ſay, (2.) you anſwered, " that it is very poſ- " ſible the author of Chriſtianity not myſterious might " miſtake or miſapply my notions, but there is too " much reaſon to believe he thought them the ſame; " and we have no reaſon to be ſorry that he hath given " me this occaſion for the explaining my meaning, and " for the vindication of myſelf in the matters I appre- " hend he had charged me with." Theſe words your lordſhip quotes out of your firſt letter. But as I have already obſerved, they are not there given as an anſwer to this that you make me here ſay; and therefore to what purpoſe you repeat them here is not eaſy to diſ- cern, unleſs it can be thought that an unſatisfactory anſwer in one place can become ſatisfactory by being repeated in another, where it is, as I humbly conceive, leſs to the purpoſe, and no anſwer at all. It was there indeed given as an anſwer to my ſaying, that I did not place certainty in clear and diſtinct ideas, which I ſaid to ſhow that you had no reaſon to bring me into the controverſy, becauſe the author of Chriſtianity not myſterious placed certainty in clear and diſtinct ideas. To ſatisfy me for your doing ſo, your lordſhip anſwers, " that it was very poſſible that author might miſtake " or miſapply my notions." A reaſon indeed, that will equally juſtify your bringing my book into any controverſy: for there is no author ſo infallible, write he in what controverſy he pleaſes, but it is poſſible he may miſtake, or miſapply my notions.

That was the force of this your lordſhip's anſwer in that place of your firſt letter, but what it ſerves for in this place of your ſecond letter, I have not wit enough to ſee. The remainder of it I have anſwered in my ſecond letter, and therefore cannot but wonder to ſee it repeated here again, without any notice taken of what I ſaid in anſwer to it, though you ſet it down here again, as you ſay, on purpoſe to defend.

But all the defence made is only to that part of my reply, which you ſet down as a freſh complaint that I make in theſe words: "this can be no reaſon why I "ſhould be joined with a man that had miſapplied my "notions, and that no man hath ſo much miſtaken "and miſapplied my notions as your lordſhip; and "therefore I ought rather to be joined with your lord-"ſhip." And then you, with ſome warmth, ſubjoin: "but is this fair and ingenuous dealing to repreſent "this matter ſo, as if your lordſhip had joined us to-"gether, becauſe he had miſunderſtood and miſapplied "my notions? Can I think your lordſhip a man of ſo "little ſenſe to make that the reaſon of it?" No, ſir, ſays your lordſhip, "it was becauſe he aſſigned no "other grounds but mine, and that in my own words; "however, now I would divert the meaning of them "another way."

My lord, I did ſet down your words at large in my ſecond letter, and therefore do not ſee how I could be liable to any charge of unfair or diſingenuous dealing in repreſenting the matter; which I am ſure you will allow as a proof of my not miſrepreſenting, ſince I find you uſe it yourſelf as a ſure fence againſt any ſuch accuſation; where you tell me, "that you have ſet "down my words at large, that I may not complain "that your lordſhip miſrepreſents my ſenſe." The ſame anſwer I muſt deſire my reader to apply for me to thoſe pages, where your lordſhip makes complaints of the like kind with this here.

The reaſons you give for joining me with the author of Chriſtianity not myſterious, are put down verbatim as you gave them; and if they did not give me that ſatisſatisfaction they were deſigned for, am I to be blamed that I did not find them better than they were? You joined me with that author, becauſe he placed certainty only in clear and diſtinct ideas. I told your lordſhip I did not do ſo, and therefore that could be no reaſon for your joining me with him. You anſwer, "it was "poſſible he might miſtake or miſapply my notions:" ſo that our agreeing in the notion of certainty (the pretended reaſon for which we were joined) failing, all the reaſon which is left, and which you offer in this anſwer for your joining of us, is the poſſibility of his miſtaking my notions. And I think it a very natural inference, that if the mere poſſibility of any one's miſtaking me, be a reaſon for my being joined with him; any one's actual miſtaking me, is a ſtronger reaſon why I ſhould be joined with him. But if ſuch an inference ſhows (more than you would have it) the ſatisfactorineſs and force of your anſwer, I hope you will not be angry with me, if I cannot change the nature of things.

Your lordſhip indeed adds in that place, that "there "is too much reaſon to believe that the author thought "his notions and mine the ſame."

Anſwer. When your lordſhip ſhall produce that reaſon, it will be ſeen whether it were too much or too little. Till it is produced, there appears no reaſon at all; and ſuch concealed reaſon, though it may be too much, can be ſuppoſed, I think, to give very little ſatisfaction to me or any body elſe in the caſe.

But to make good what you have ſaid in your anſwer, your lordſhip here replies, that "you did not join us "together, becauſe he had miſunderſtood and miſap-"plied my notions." Anſw. Neither did I ſay, that therefore you did join us. But this I crave leave to ſay, that all the reaſon you there gave for your joining us together, was the poſſibility of his miſtaking and miſapplying my notions.

But your lordſhip now tells me, "No, Sir," this was not the reaſon of your joining us; but "it was "becauſe he aſſigned no other grounds but mine, and "in my own words." Anſw. My lord, I do not remember that in that place you give this as a reaſon for your joining of us; and I could not anſwer in that place to what you did not there ſay, but to what you there did ſay. Now your lordſhip does ſay it here, here I take the liberty to anſwer it.

The reaſon you now give for your joining me with that author, is "becauſe he aſſigned no other grounds "but mine;" which, however tenderly expreſſed, is to be underſtood, I ſuppoſe, that he did aſſign my grounds. Of what, I beſeech your lordſhip, did he aſſign my grounds, and in my words? If it were not my grounds of certainty, it could be no manner of reaſon for your joining me with him; becauſe the only reaſon why at firſt you made him (and me with him) "a gentleman "of the new way of reaſoning, was his ſuppoſing clear "and diſtinct ideas neceſſary to certainty," which was the opinion that you declared you oppoſed. Now, my lord, if you can ſhow where that author has in my words aſſigned my grounds of certainty, there will be ſome grounds for what you ſay. But till your lordſhip does that, it will be pretty hard to believe that to be the ground of your joining us together; which, being no where to be found, can ſcarce be thought the true reaſon of your doing it.

Your lordſhip adds, "however, now I would divert "the meaning of them [i. e. thoſe my words] another "way."

Anſw. Whenever you are pleaſed to ſet down thoſe words of mine, wherein that author aſſigns my grounds of certainty, it will be ſeen how I now divert their meaning another way: till then, they muſt remain with ſeveral other of your lordſhip's inviſible "them," which are no where to be found.

But to your aſking me, "whether I can think your "lordſhip a man of that little ſenſe?" I crave leave to reply, that I hope it muſt not be concluded, that as often as in your way of writing I meet with any thing that does not ſeem to me ſatisfactory, and I endeavour to ſhow that it does not prove what it is made uſe of for, that I preſently "think your lordſhip a man of "little ſenſe." This would be a very hard rule in defending one's ſelf; eſpecially for me, againſt ſo great and learned a man, whose reasons and meaning it is not, I find, always easy for so mean a capacity as mine to reach: and therefore I have taken great care to set down your words in most places, to secure myself from the imputation of misrepresenting your sense, and to leave it fairly before the reader to judge, whether I mistake it, and how far I am to be blamed if I do. And I would have set down your whole letter page by page as I answered it, would not that have made my book too big.

and

If I must write under this fear, that you apprehend I think meanly of you, as often as I think any reason you make use of is not satisfactory in the point it is brought for; the causes of uneasiness would return too often, and it would be better once for all to conclude your lordship infallible, and acquiesce in whatever you say, than in every page to be so rude as to tell your lordship, "I think you have little sense;" if that be the interpretation of my endeavouring to show, that your reasons come short any where.

My lord, when you did me the honour to answer my first letter (which I thought might have passed for a submissive complaint of what I did not well understand, rather than a dispute with your lordship) you were pleased to insert into it direct accusations against my book; which looked as if you had a mind to enter into a direct controversy with me. This condescension in your lordship has made me think myself under the protection of the laws of controversy, which allow a free examining and showing the weakness of the reasons brought by the other side, without any offence. If this be not permitted me, I must confess I have been mistaken, and have been guilty in answering you any thing at all: for how to answer without answering, I do not know.

I wish you had never writ any thing that I was particularly concerned to examine; and what I have been concerned to examine, I wish it had given me no occasion for any other answer, but an admiration of the manner and justness of your corrections, and an acknowledgment of an increase of that great opinion which I had of your lordship before. But I hope it is not expected pected from me in this debate, that I ſhould admit as good and concluſive all that drops from your pen, for fear of cauſing ſo much diſpleaſure as you ſeem here to have upon this occaſion, or for fear you ſhould object to me the preſumption of thinking you had but little ſenſe, as often as I endeavoured to ſhow that what you ſay is of little force.

When thoſe words and grounds of mine are produced, that the author of Chriſtianity not myſterious aſſigned, which your lordſhip thinks a ſufficient reaſon for your joining me with him, in oppoſing the doctrine of the Trinity; I ſhall conſider them, and endeavour to give you ſatisfaction about them, as well as I have already concerning thoſe ten lines, which you have more than once quoted out of him, as taken out of my book, and which is all that your lordſhip has produced out of him of that kind: in all which there is not one ſyllable of clear and diſtinct ideas, or of certainty founded in them. In the mean time, in anſwer to your other queſtion, " but is this fair and ingenuous dealing?" I refer my reader to my ſecond letter, where he may ſee at large all this whole matter, and all the unfairneſs and diſingenuity of it, which I ſubmit to him, to judge whether for any fault of that kind it ought to have drawn on me the marks of ſo much diſpleaſure.

Your lordſhip goes on here, and tells me, that " although you were willing to allow me all reaſonable " occaſions for my own vindication, as appears by your " words; yet you were ſenſible enough that I had given " too juſt an occaſion to apply them in that manner, as " appears by the next page."

What was it, I beſeech you, my lord, that I was to vindicate myſelf from, and what was thoſe " them" I had given too juſt an occaſion to apply in that manner; and what was that manner they were applied in, and what was the occaſion they were ſo applied? For I can find none of all theſe in that next page to which your lordſhip refers me. When thoſe are ſet down, the world will be better able to judge of the reaſon you had to join me after the manner you did. However, ſaying, my lord, without proving, I humbly conceive, is but ſaying; ſaying; and in ſuch perſonal matter ſo turned, ſhows more the diſpoſition of the ſpeaker, than any ground for what is ſaid. Your lordſhip, as a proof of your great care of me, tells me at the top of that page, that you had ſaid ſo much, that nothing could be ſaid more for my vindication: and, before you come to the bottom of it, you labour to perſuade the world, that I have need to vindicate myſelf. Another poſſibly, who could find in his heart to ſay two ſuch things, would have taken care they ſhould not have ſtood in the ſame page, where the juxta-poſition might enlighten them too much, and ſurprize the ſight. But poſſibly your lordſhip is ſo well ſatisfied of the world's readineſs to believe your profeſſions of good-will to me, as a mark whereof you tell me here of your willingneſs "to allow me all reaſonable "occaſions to vindicate myſelf;" that nobody can ſee any thing but kindneſs in whatever you ſay, though it appears in ſo different ſhapes.

In the following words, your lordſhip accuſes me of too nice a piece of criticiſm; and tells me it looks like chicaning. Anſw. I did not expect, in a controverſy begun and managed as this which your lordſhip has been pleaſed to have with me, to be accuſed of chicaning, without great provocation; becauſe the mentioning that word, might perhaps raiſe in the reader's mind ſome odd thoughts which were better ſpared. But this accuſation made me look back into the places you quoted in the margent, and there find the matter to ſtand thus:

To a pretty large quotation ſet down out of the poſtſcript to my firſt letter, you ſubjoin; "which words "ſeem to expreſs ſo much of a chriſtian ſpirit and tem- "per, that your lordſhip cannot believe I intended to "give any advantage to the enemies of the chriſtian "faith; but whether there hath not been too juſt an "occaſion for them to apply "them" in that manner, "is a thing very fit for me to conſider."

In my anſwer, I take notice that the term "them," in this paſſage of your lordſhip's, can in the ordinary conſtruction of our language be applied to nothing but "which words" in the beginning of that paſſage, i. e. to my words immediately preceding. This your lordſhip ſhip calls chicaning, and gives this reaſon for it, viz. " becauſe any one that reads without a deſign to cavil, " would eaſily interpret " them" of my words and no- " tions about which the debate was." Anſw. That any one that reads that paſſage with or without deſign to cavil, could hardly make it intelligible without interpreting " them" ſo, I readily grant; but that it is eaſy for me or any body to interpret any one's meaning contrary to the neceſſary conſtruction and plain import of the words, that I crave leave to deny. I am ſure it is not chicaning to preſume that ſo great an author as your lordſhip writes according to the rules of grammar, and as another man writes, who underſtands our language, and would be underſtood: to do the contrary, would be a preſumption liable to blame, and might deſerve the name of chicaning and cavil. And that in this caſe it was not eaſy to avoid the interpreting the term " them" as I did, the reaſon you give why I ſhould have done it, is a farther proof. Your lordſhip, to ſhow it was eaſy, ſays " the poſtſcript comes in but as a pa- " rentheſis:" now I challenge any one living to ſhow me where in that place the parentheſis muſt begin, and where end, which can make " them" applicable to any thing, but the words of my poſtſcript. I have tried with more care and pains than is uſually required of a reader in ſuch caſes, and cannot, I muſt own, find where to make a breach in the thread of your diſcourſe, with the imaginary parentheſis, which your lordſhip mentions, and was not, I ſuppoſe, omitted by the printer for want of marks to print it. And if this, which you give as the key, that opens to the interpretation that I ſhould have made, be ſo hard to be found, the interpretation itſelf could not be ſo very eaſy as you ſpeak of.

But to avoid all blame for underſtanding that paſſage as I did, and to ſecure myſelf from being ſuſpected to ſeek a ſubterfuge in the natural import of your words, againſt what might be conjectured to be your ſenſe, I added, " but if by any new way of conſtruction, unin- " telligible to me, the word " them" here ſhall be ap- " plied to any paſſages of my Eſſay of Human Under- " ſtanding; I muſt humbly crave leave to obſerve this

" one

" one thing, in the whole course of what your lordship " has designed for my satisfaction, that though my com- " plaint be of your lordship's manner of applying what " I had published in my Essay, so as to interest me in a " controversy wherein I meddled not; yet your lord- " ship all along tells me of others, that have misapplied " I know not what words in my book, after I know not " what manner. Now as to this matter, I beseech your " lordship to believe that when any one in such a man- " ner applies my words contrary to what I intended " them, so as to make them opposite to the doctrine of " the Trinity, and me a party in that controversy against " the Trinity, as your lordship knows I complain your " lordship has done; I shall complain of them too, and " consider, as well as I can, what satisfaction they give " me and others in it." This passage of mine your lordship here represents thus, viz. that I say, that if by an unintelligible new way of construction the word " them" be applied to any passages in my book, what then? Why then, whoever they are, I intend to complain of them too. But, says your lordship, the words just before tell me who they are, viz. the enemies of the christian faith. And then your lordship asks, whether this be all that I intend, viz. only to complain of them for making me a party in the controversy against the Trinity?

My lord, were I given to chicaning, as you call my being stopt by faults of grammar that disturb the sense, and make the discourse incoherent and unintelligible, if we are to take it from the words as they are, I should not want matter enough for such an exercise of my pen; as for example, here again, where your lordship makes me say, that if the word " them" be applied to any passages in my book, then whoever they are, I intend to complain, &c. These being set down for my words, I would be very glad to be able to put them into a grammatical construction, and make to myself an intelligible sense of them. But " they" being not a word that I have an absolute power over, to place where and for what I will, I confess I cannot do it. For the term " they" in the words here, as your lordship has set them down, down, having nothing that it can refer to, but paſſages, or "them," which ſtand for words, it muſt be a very ſudden metamorphoſis that muſt change them into perſons, for it is for perſons that the word "they" ſtands here; and yet I crave leave to ſay, that as far as I underſtand Engliſh, "they," is a word cannot be uſed without reference to ſomething mentioned before. Your lordſhip tells me, "the words juſt before tell me who "they are." The words juſt mentioned before, are theſe; "if by an unintelligible new way of conſtruc-"tion the word "them" be applied to any paſſage of "my book:" for it is to ſome words before indeed, but before in the ſame contexture of diſcourſe, that the word "they" muſt refer, to make it any where intelligible. But here are no perſons mentioned in the words juſt before, though your lordſhip tells me the words juſt before ſhow who they are; but this juſt before, where the perſons are mentioned whom your lordſhip intends by "they" here, is ſo far off, that ſixteen pages of your lordſhip's letter, one hundred and ſeventy-four pages of my ſecond letter, and above one hundred pages of your lordſhip's firſt letter come between: ſo that one muſt read above two hundred and eighty pages from the enemies of the chriſtian faith, in your firſt letter, before one can come to the "they" which refers to them here in your lordſhip's ſecond letter.

My lord, it is my misfortune that I cannot pretend to any figure amongſt the men of learning; but I would not for that reaſon be rendered ſo deſpicable, that I could not write ordinary ſenſe in my own language; I muſt beg leave therefore to inform my reader, that what your lordſhip has ſet down here as mine, is neither my words, nor my ſenſe. For, me, that if I should be so unmannerly as to measure your understanding by mine, I should not know what to think of them. In those cases therefore, I presume not to go beyond my own capacity: I tell your lordship often (which I hope modesty will permit) what my weak understanding will not reach; but I am far from saying it is therefore absolutely unintelligible. I leave to others the benefit of their better judgments, to be enlightened by your lordship where I am not.

1. I ſay not, "if by any unintelligible new way of "conſtruction;" but I ſay, "if by any new way of "conſtruction unintelligible to me:" which are far different expreſſions. For that may be very intelligible to others, which may be unintelligible to me. And indeed, my lord, there are ſo many paſſages in your writings in this controverſy with me, which for their conſtruction, as well as otherwiſe, are ſo unintelligible to me,

2. The use your lordship here makes of these words, "but if by any new way of construction unintelligible "to me, the word "them" be applied to any passages "in my book;" is not the principal, nor the only (as your lordship makes it) use for which I said them: but this; that if your lordship by "them" in that place were to be understood to mean, that there were others that misapplied passages of my book; this was no satisfaction for what your lordship had done in that kind. Though this, I observed, was your way of defence; that when I complained of what your lordship had done, you told me, that others had done so too: as if that could be any manner of satisfaction. I added in the close, "that when any one in such a manner applies my words "contrary to what I intended them, so as to make "them opposite to the doctrine of the Trinity, and me "a party in that controversy against the Trinity, as "your lordship knows I complain your lordship has "done; I shall complain of them too, and consider, as "well as I can, what satisfaction they give me and "others in it." Of this "any one" of mine, your lordship makes your fore-mentioned "they," whether with any advantage of sense or clearness to my words, the reader must judge. However, this latter part of that passage, with the particular turn your lordship gives to it, is what your words would persuade your reader is all that I say here: would not your lordship, upon such an occasion from me, cry out again, "is this fair and "ingenuous dealing?" And would not you think you had reason to do so? But let us see what we must guess your lordship makes me say, and your exceptions to it.

Your

Your lordſhip makes me ſay, " whoever they are," who miſapply my words, as I complain your lordſhip has done (for theſe words muſt be ſupplied, to make the ſentence to me intelligible) " I intend to complain " of them too:" and then you find fault with me for uſing the indefinite word " whoever," and as a reproof for the unreaſonableneſs of it, you ſay, " but the words " juſt before tell me who they are." But my words are not, " whoever they are," but my words are, " when " any one in ſuch a manner applies my words contrary " to what I intended them, &c." Your lordſhip would here have me underſtand, that there are thoſe that have done it, and rebukes me that I ſpeak as if I knew not any one that had done it; and that I may not plead ignorance, you ſay " your words juſt before told me who " they were, viz. the enemies of the chriſtian faith."

What muſt I do now to keep my word, and ſatisfy your lordſhip? Muſt I complain of the enemies of the chriſtian faith in general, that they have applied my words as aforeſaid, and then conſider, as well as I can, what ſatisfaction they give me and others in it? For that was all I promiſed to do. But this would be ſtrange, to complain of the enemies of the chriſtian faith, for doing what it is very likely they never all did, and what I do not know that any one of them has done. Or muſt I, to content your lordſhip, read over all the writings of the enemies of the chriſtian faith, to ſee whether any one of them has applied my words, i. e. in ſuch a manner as I complained your lordſhip has done, that if they have, I may complain of them too? This truly, my lord, is more than I have time for; and if it were worth while, when it is done, I perceive I ſhould not content your lordſhip in it. For you aſk me here, " is this all I in- " tend, only to complain of them for making me a " party in the controverſy againſt the Trinity?" No, my lord, this is not all. I promiſed too, " to conſider " as well as I can what ſatisfaction (if they offer any) " they give me and others for ſo doing." And why ſhould not this content your lordſhip in reference to others, as well as it does in reference to yourſelf? I have but one meaſure for your lordſhip and others. When others others treat me after the manner you have done, why ſhould it not be enough to anſwer them after the ſame manner I have done your lordſhip? But perhaps your lordſhip has ſome dextrous meaning under this, which I am not quick-ſighted enough to perceive, and ſo do not reply right, as you would have me.

I muſt beg my reader's pardon as well as your lordſhip's for uſing ſo many words about paſſages, that ſeem not of themſelves of that importance. I confeſs, that in themſelves they are not; but yet it is my misfortune, that, in this controverſy, your way of writing and repreſenting my ſenſe forces me to it.

Your lordſhip's name in writing is eſtabliſhed above control, and therefore it will be ill-breeding in one, who barely reads what you write, not to take every thing for perfect in its kind, which your lordſhip ſays. Clearneſs, and force, and conſiſtence are to be preſumed always, whatever your lordſhip's words be: and there is no other remedy for an anſwerer, who finds it difficult any where to come at your meaning or argument, but to make his excuſe for it, in laying the particulars before the reader, that he may be judge where the fault lies; eſpecially where any matter of fact is conteſted, deductions from the riſe are often neceſſary, which cannot be made in few words, nor without ſeveral repetitions: an inconvenience poſſibly fitter to be endured, than that your lordſhip, in the run of your learned notions, ſhould be ſhackled with the ordinary and ſtrict rules of language; and, in the delivery of your ſublimer ſpeculations, be tied down to the mean and contemptible rudiments of grammar: though your being above theſe, and freed from ſervile obſervance in the uſe of trivial particles, whereon the connexion of diſcourſe chiefly depends, cannot but cauſe great difficulties to the reader. And however it may be an eaſe to any great man, to find himſelf above the ordinary rules of writing, he who is bound to follow the connexion, and find out his meaning, will have his taſk much increaſed by it.

I am very ſenſible how much this has ſwelled theſe papers already, and yet I do not ſee how any thing leſs than what I have ſaid could clear thoſe paſſages, which we have hitherto examined, and ſet them in their due light.

Your next words are theſe, "but whether I have not "made myſelf too much a party in it [i. e. the contro- "verſy againſt the Trinity] will appear before we have "done." This is an item for me, which your lordſhip ſeems ſo very fond of, and ſo careful to inculcate, where-ever you bring in any words it can be tacked to, that if one can avoid thinking it to be the main end of your writing, one cannot yet but ſee, that it could not be ſo much in the thoughts and words of a great man, who is above ſuch perſonal matters, and which he knows the world ſoon grows weary of, unleſs it had ſome very par-ticular buſineſs there. Whether it be the author that has prejudiced you againſt his book, or the book preju-diced you againſt the author, ſo it is, I perceive, that both I and my Eſſay are fallen under your diſpleaſure.

I am not unacquainted what great ſtreſs is often laid upon invidious names by ſkilful diſputants, to ſupply the want of better arguments. But give me leave, my lord, to ſay, that it is too late for me now to begin to value thoſe marks of good-will, or a good cauſe; and therefore I ſhall ſay nothing more to them, as fitter to be left to the examination of the thoughts within your own breaſt, from what ſource ſuch reaſonings ſpring, and whither they tend.

I am going, my lord, to a tribunal that has a right to judge of thoughts, and being ſecure that I there ſhall be found of no party but that of truth (for which there is required nothing but the receiving truth in the love of it) I matter not much of what party any one ſhall, as may beſt ſerve his turn, denominate me here. Your lordſhip's is not the firſt pen from which I have received ſuch ſtrokes as theſe, without any great harm; I never found freedom of ſtyle did me any hurt with thoſe who knew me, and if thoſe who know me not will take up borrowed prejudices, it will be more to their own harm than mine: ſo that in this, I ſhall give your lordſhip little other trouble but my thanks ſometimes, where I find you ſkilfully and induſtriouſly recommending me to the world, under the character you have choſen for me.

me. Only give me leave to say, that if the Essay I shall leave behind me hath no other fault to sink it but heresy and inconsistency with the articles of the christian faith, I am apt to think it will last in the world, and do service to truth, even the truths of religion, notwithstanding that imputation laid on it by so mighty a hand as your lordship's.

In your two next paragraphs your lordship accuses me of cavilling in my second letter, whither for shortness I refer my reader. I shall only add, that though in the debate about mysteries of faith, your adversaries, as you say, are not heathens; yet any one among us whom your lordship should speak of, as not owning the scripture to be the foundation and rule of faith, would, I presume, be thought to receive from you a character very little different from that of a heathen. Which being a part of your compliment to me, will, I humbly conceive, excuse what I there said, from being a cavilling exception.

Hitherto your lordship, notwithstanding that you understood the world so well, has employed your pen in personal matters, how unacceptable soever to the world you declare it to be: how must I behave myself in the case? If I answer nothing, my silence is so apt to be interpreted guilt or concession, that even the deferring my answer to some points, or not giving it in the proper place, is reflected on as no small transgression, whereof there are two examples in the two following pages. And if I do answer so at large, as your way of writing requires, and as the matter deserves, I recal to your memory "the springs of Modena, by the ebullition of "my thoughts." It is hard, my lord, between these two to manage one's self to your good liking: however, I shall endeavour to collect the force of your reasonings, wherever I can find it, as short as I can, and apply my answers to that, though with the omission of a great many incidents deserving to be taken notice of: if my slowness, not able to keep pace every where with your uncommon flights, shall have missed any argument whereon you lay any stress; if you please to point it out to me, I ſhall not fail to endeavour to give you ſatiſfaction therein.

In the next paragraph your lordſhip ſays, " thoſe who " are not ſparing of writing about articles of faith, and " among them take great care to avoid ſome which " have been always eſteemed fundamental," &c. This ſeems alſo to contain ſomething perſonal in it. But how far I am concerned in it I ſhall know, when you ſhall be pleaſed to tell me who thoſe are, and then it will be time enough for me to anſwer.

This is what your lordſhip has brought in under your ſecond anſwer, in theſe four pages, as a defence of it; and how much of it is a defence of that ſecond anſwer, let the reader judge.

I am now come to the third of thoſe anſwers, which you ſaid, you would lay together and defend. And it is this:

" That my grounds of certainty tend to ſcepticiſm, " and that in an age wherein the myſteries of faith are " too much expoſed by the promoters of ſcepticiſm and " infidelity, it is a thing of dangerous conſequence to " ſtart ſuch new methods of certainty, as are apt to " leave men's minds more doubtful than before."

This is what you ſet down here to be defended: the defence follows, wherein your lordſhip tells me that I ſay, " theſe words contain a farther accuſation of my " book, which ſhall be conſidered in its due place. " But this is the proper place of conſidering it: for " your lordſhip ſaid, that hereby I have given too juſt " occaſion to the enemies of the chriſtian faith, to make " uſe of my words and notions, as was evidently proved " from my own conceſſions. And if this be ſo, how- " ever you were willing to have had me explain myſelf " to the general ſatisfaction; yet ſince I decline it, you " do inſiſt upon it, that I cannot clear myſelf from lay- " ing that foundation, which the author of Chriſtianity " not myſterious built upon."

In which I crave leave to acquaint your lordſhip with what I do not underſtand.

Firſt, I do not underſtand what is meant, by " this " is the proper place;" for, in ordinary conſtruction, theſe theſe words ſeem to denote this 20th page of your lordſhip's ſecond letter, which you were then writing, though the ſenſe would make me think the 46th page of my ſecond letter, which you were then anſwering, ſhould be meant. This perhaps your lordſhip may think a nice piece of criticiſm; but till it be cleared, I cannot tell what to ſay in my excuſe. For it is likely your lordſhip would again aſk me, whether I could think you a man of ſo little ſenſe, if I ſhould underſtand theſe words to mean the 20th page of your ſecond letter, which nobody can conceive your lordſhip ſhould think a proper place for me to conſider and anſwer what you had writ in your firſt? It would be as hard to underſtand, "this is," to mean a place in my former letter, which was paſt and done; but it is no wonder for me to be miſtaken in your privilege-word "this." Beſides, there is this farther difficulty to underſtand "this is the proper place," of the 46th page of my former letter; becauſe I do not ſee why the 82d page of that letter, where I did conſider and anſwer it, was not as proper a place of conſidering it as the 46th, where I give a reaſon why I deferred it. Farther, if I underſtood what you meant here by "this is the proper place," I ſhould poſſibly apprehend better the force of your argument ſubjoined to prove this, whatever it be, to be the proper place; the caſual particle "for," which introduces the following words, making them a reaſon of thoſe preceding. But in the preſent obſcurity of this matter, I confeſs I do not ſee how your having ſaid "that I gave occaſion to the enemies of the chriſtian "faith," &c. proves any thing concerning the proper place at all.

Another thing that I do not underſtand in this defence, is your inference in the next period, where you tell me, "if this be ſo, you inſiſt upon it that I ſhould clear "myſelf:" for I do not ſee how your having ſaid what you there ſaid (for that is it which "this" here, if it be not within privilege, muſt ſignify) can be a reaſon for your inſiſting on my clearing myſelf of any thing, though I allow this to be your lordſhip's ordinary way of proceeding, to inſiſt upon your ſuggeſtions and ſuppoſitions in one place, as if they were foundations to build what you pleaſed on in another.

Thus then ſtands your defence: "my grounds of certainty tend to ſcepticiſm, and to ſtart new methods "of certainty is of dangerous conſequence." Becauſe I did not conſider this your accuſation in the proper place of conſidering it, this is the proper place of conſidering it: becauſe your lordſhip ſaid, "I had given "too juſt occaſion to the enemies of the chriſtian faith "to make uſe of my words and notions;" and becauſe your lordſhip ſaid ſo, therefore you inſiſt upon it that I clear myſelf, &c. This appears, to me, to be the connexion and force of your defence hitherto: if I am miſtaken in it, your lordſhip's words are ſet down, the reader muſt judge whether the conſtruction of the words do not make it ſo.

But before I leave them, there are ſome things that I crave permiſſion to repreſent to your lordſhip more particularly.

1. That to the accuſations of ſcepticiſm, I have anſwered in another, and, as I think, a proper place.

2. That the accuſation of dangerous conſequence, I have conſidered and anſwered in my former letter; but that being, it ſeems, not the proper place of conſidering it, you have not in this your defence thought fit to take any notice of it.

3. That your lordſhip has not any where proved, that my placing of certainty in the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of ideas, is apt to leave men's minds more doubtful than they were before; which is what your accuſation ſuppoſes.

4. That you ſet down thoſe words of mine, "theſe "words contain a farther accuſation of my book, which "ſhall be conſidered in its due place;" as all the anſwer which I gave to that new accuſation, except what you take notice of, out of my 95th page; and take no notice of what I ſay from page 82 to 95; where I conſidered it as I promiſed, and, as I thought, fully anſwered it.

5. That the too juſt occaſion, you ſay, I have given to the enemies of the chriſtian faith to make uſe of my words and notions," wants to be proved.

6. That

6. That "what uſe the enemies of the chriſtian faith "have made of my words and notions," is no where ſhown, though often talked of.

7. That "if the enemies of the chriſtian faith have "made uſe of my words and notions," yet that, as I have ſhown, is no proof, that they are of dangerous conſequence: much leſs is it a proof, that this propoſition, "certainty conſiſts in the perception of the agreement "or diſagreement of ideas," is of dangerous conſequence. For ſome words or notions in a book, that are of dangerous conſequence, do not make all the propoſitions of that book to be of dangerous conſequence.

8. That your lordſhip tells me, "you were willing "to have had me explained myſelf to the general ſatiſ-"faction;" which is what, in the place from which the former words are taken, you expreſſed thus: that "my anſwer did not come fully up in all things to that "which you could wiſh." To which I have given an anſwer: and methinks your defence here ſhould have been applied to that, and not the ſame thing (which has been anſwered) ſet down again as part of your defence. But pray, my lord, give me leave to aſk, is not this meant for a perſonal matter? which though the world, as you ſay, is ſoon weary of, your lordſhip, it ſeems, is not.

9. That you ſay, "you inſiſt upon it, that I cannot "clear myſelf from laying that foundation which the "author of Chriſtianity not myſterious built upon." Certainly this perſonal matter is of ſome very great conſequence, that your lordſhip, who underſtands the world ſo well, inſiſts ſo much upon it. But if it be true, that he built upon my foundation, and if it be of ſuch moment to your lordſhip's buſineſs in the preſent controverſy; methinks, without ſo much intricacy, it ſhould not be hard to ſhow it: it is but proving what foundation of certainty (for it is of that, all this diſpute is) he went upon, which, as I humbly conceive, your lordſhip has not done; and then ſhowing that to be my foundation of certainty; and the buſineſs is ended. But inſtead of this your lordſhip ſays, that "his account of "reaſon ſuppoſes clear and diſtinct ideas neceſſary to

" certainty; that he imagined he built upon my grounds; " that he thought his and my notions of certainty to be " the ſame; that there has been too juſt occaſion given, " for the enemies of the chriſtian faith to apply my " words in I know not what manner." Theſe and the like arguments, to prove that he goes upon my grounds, your lordſhip has uſed; but they are, I confeſs, too ſubtile and too fine for me to feel the force of them, in a matter of fact wherein it was ſo eaſy to produce both his and my grounds out of our books (without all this talk about ſuppoſitions and imaginations, and occaſions ſo far remote from any direct proof) if it were a matter of that conſequence to be ſo inſiſted upon, as your lordſhip profeſſedly does.

Your lordſhip has ſpent a great many pages to tie me to that author; and " you ſtill inſiſt upon it, that I can- " not clear myſelf from laying that foundation which " the author of Chriſtianity not myſterious built upon." What this great concern in a matter of ſo little moment means, I leave the reader to gueſs: for, I beſeech your lordſhip, of what great conſequence is it to the world? What great intereſt has any truth of religion in this, that I and another man (be he who he will) make uſe of the ſame grounds to different purpoſes? This I am ſure, it tends not to the clearing or confirming any one material truth in the world. If the foundation I have laid be true, I ſhall neither diſown nor diſlike it, whatever this or any other author ſhall build upon it; becauſe, as your lordſhip knows, ill things may be built upon a good foundation, and yet the foundation never the worſe for it. And therefore if that, or any other author hath built upon my foundation, I ſee nothing in it, that I ought to be concerned to clear myſelf from.

If you can ſhow that my foundation is falſe, or ſhow me a better foundation of certainty than mine, I promiſe you immediately to renounce and relinquiſh mine, with thanks to your lordſhip: but till you can prove, that he that firſt invented ſyllogiſm as a rule of right reaſoning, or firſt laid down this principle, " that it is impoſſible " for the ſame thing to be and not to be;" is anſwerable for all thoſe opinions which have been endeavoured to be proved proved by mode and figure, or have been built upon that maxim; I ſhall not think myſelf concerned, whatever any one ſhall build upon this foundation of mine, that certainty conſiſts in the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of any two ideas, as they are expreſſed in any propoſition: much leſs ſhall I think myſelf concerned, for what you ſhall pleaſe to ſuppoſe (for that, with ſubmiſſion, is all you have done hitherto) any one has built upon it, though he were ever ſo oppoſite to your lordſhip in any one of the opinions he ſhould build on it.

In that caſe, if he ſhould prove troubleſome to your lordſhip with any argument pretended to be built upon my foundation, I humbly conceive you have no other remedy, but to ſhow either the foundation falſe, and in that caſe I confeſs myſelf concerned; or his deduction from it wrong, and that I ſhall not be at all concerned in. But if, inſtead of this, your lordſhip ſhall find no other way to ſubvert this foundation of certainty, but by ſaying, "the enemies of the chriſtian faith build "on it," becauſe you ſuppoſe one author builds on it; this I fear, my lord, will very little advantage the cauſe you defend, whilſt it ſo viſibly ſtrengthens and gives credit to your adverſaries, rather than weakens any foundation they go upon. For the unitarians, I imagine, will be apt to ſmile at ſuch a way of arguing, viz. that they go on this ground, becauſe the author of Chriſtianity not myſterious goes upon it, or is ſuppoſed by your lordſhip to go upon it: and by-ſtanders will do little leſs than ſmile, to find my book brought into the ſocinian controverſy, and the ground of certainty laid down in my Eſſay condemned, only becauſe that author is ſuppoſed by your lordſhip to build upon it. For this in ſhort is the caſe, and this the way your lordſhip has uſed in anſwering objections againſt the Trinity in point of reaſon. I know your lordſhip cannot be ſuſpected of writing booty: but I fear ſuch a way of arguing, in ſo great a man as your lordſhip, will, "in an age wherein "the myſtries of faith are too much expoſed, give too "juſt an occaſion to the enemies," and alſo to the friends friends of the chriſtian faith, to ſuſpect that there is a great failure ſomewhere.

But to paſs by that: this I am ſure is perſonal matter, which the world perhaps will think it need not have been troubled with.

Your Defence of your third Anſwer goes on; and to prove that the author of Chriſtianity not myſterious built upon my foundation, you tell me, that my ground of certainty is the agreement or diſagreement of ideas, as expreſſed in any propoſition: which are my own words. "From hence you urged, that let the propoſition come "to us any way, either by human or divine authority, "if our certainty depend upon this, we can be no more "certain, than we have clear perception of the agree-"ment or diſagreement of ideas contained in it. And "from hence the author of Chriſtianity not myſterious "thought he had reaſon to reject all myſteries of faith "which are contained in propoſitions, upon my grounds "of certainty."

Since this perſonal matter appears of ſuch weight to your lordſhip, that it needs to be farther proſecuted; and you think this your argument, to prove that author built upon my foundation, worth the repeating here again; I am obliged to enter ſo far again into this perſonal matter, as to examine this paſſage, which I formerly paſſed by as of no moment. For it is eaſy to ſhow, that what you ſay viſibly proves not, that he built upon my foundation; and next, it is evident, that if it were proved that he did ſo, yet this is no proof that my method of certainty is of dangerous conſequence; which is what was to be defended.

As to the firſt of theſe, your lordſhip would prove, that the author of Chriſtianity not myſterious built upon my grounds; and how do you prove it? viz. "becauſe "he thought he had reaſon to reject all myſteries of "faith, which are contained in propoſitions, upon my "grounds." How does it appear, that he rejected them upon my grounds? Does he any where ſay ſo? No! that is not offered; there is no need of ſuch an evidence of matter of fact, in a caſe which is only of matter of fact. But "he thought he had reaſon to reject them "upon

" upon my grounds of certainty." How does it appear that he thought ſo? Very plainly: becauſe " let the pro-" poſition come to us by human or divine authority, if " our certainty depend upon the perception of the agree-" ment or diſagreement of the ideas contained in it, we " can be no more certain than we have clear perception " of that agreement." The conſequence, I grant, is good, that if certainty, i. e. knowledge, conſiſts in the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of ideas, then we can certainly know the truth of no propoſition further than we perceive that agreement or diſagree-ment. But how does it follow from hence, that he thought he had reaſon upon my grounds to reject any propoſition, that contained a myſtery of faith; or, as your lordſhip expreſſes it, " all myſteries of faith which " are contained in propoſitions?"

Whether your lordſhip by the word rejecting, accuſes him of not knowing, or of not believing ſome propoſi-tion that contains an article of faith; or what he has done or not done; I concern not myſelf: that which I deny, is the conſequence above-mentioned, which I ſubmit to your lordſhip to be proved. And when you have proved it, and ſhown yourſelf to be ſo familiar with the thought of that author, as to be able to be poſi-tive what he thought, without his telling you; it will remain farther to be proved, that becauſe he thought ſo, therefore he built right upon my foundation; for other-wiſe no prejudice will come to my foundation, by any ill uſe made of it; nor will it be made good, that my method or way of certainty is of dangerous conſequence; which is what your lordſhip is here to defend. Me-thinks your lordſhip's argument here is all one with this: Ariſtotle's ground of certainty (except of firſt principles) lies in this, that thoſe things which agree in a third, agree themſelves: we can be certain of no pro-poſition (excepting firſt principles) coming to us either by divine or human authority, if our certainty depend upon this, farther than there is ſuch an agreement: therefore the author of Chriſtianity not myſterious, thought he had reaſon to reject all myſteries of faith, which are contained in propoſitions upon Ariſtotle's grounds.

grounds. This conſequence, as ſtrange as it is, is juſt the ſame with what is in your lordſhip's repeated argument againſt me. For let Ariſtotle's ground of certainty be this that I have named, or what it will, how does it follow, that becauſe my ground of certainty is placed in the agreement or diſagreement of ideas, therefore the author of Chriſtianity not myſterious, rejected any propoſition more upon my grounds than Ariſtotle's? And will not Ariſtotle, by your lordſhip's way of arguing here, from the uſe any one may make or think he makes of it, be guilty alſo of ſtarting a new method of certainty of dangerous conſequence, whether this method be true or falſe, if that or any other author whoſe writings you diſlike, thought he built upon it, or be ſuppoſed by your lordſhip to think ſo? But, as I humbly conceive, propoſitions, ſpeculative propoſitions ſuch as mine are, about which all this ſtir is made, are to be judged of by their truth or falſehood, and not by the uſe any one ſhall make of them; much leſs by the perſons who are ſuppoſed to build on them. And therefore it may be juſtly wondered, ſince you ſay it is dangerous, why you never proved or attempted to prove it to be falſe.

But you complain here again, that I anſwered not a word to this in the proper place. My lord, if I offended your lordſhip by paſſing it by, becauſe I thought there was no argument in it; I hope I have now given you ſome ſort of ſatisfaction, by ſhowing there is no argument in it, and letting you ſee, that your conſequence here could not be inferred from your antecedent. If you think it may, I deſire you to try it in a ſyllogiſm. For, whatever you are pleaſed to ſay in another place, my way of certainty by ideas will admit of antecedents and conſequents, and of ſyllogiſm, as the proper form to try whether the inference be right or no. I ſhall ſet down your following words, that the reader may ſee your lordſhip's manner of reaſoning concerning this matter in its full force and conſiſtency, and try it in a ſyllogiſm if he pleaſes. Your words are:

" By this it evidently appears, that although your " lordſhip was willing to allow me all fair ways of inter-

" interpreting my own sense; yet you by no means " thought, that my words were wholly misunderstood " or misapplied by that author: but rather that he saw " into the true consequence of them, as they lie in my " book. And what answer do I give to this? Not a " word in the proper place for it."

You tell me, " you were willing to allow me all fair " ways of interpreting my own sense." If your lordship had been conscious to yourself, that you had herein meant me any kindness, I think I may presume, you would not have minded me here again of a favour, which you had told me of but in the preceding page, and, to make it an obligation, need not have been more than once talked of; unless your lordship thought the obligation was such, that it would hardly be seen, unless I were told of it in words at length, and in more places than one. For what favour, I beseech you, my lord, is it to allow me to do that which needed not your allowance to be done, and I could have done (if it had been necessary) of myself, without being blamed for taking that liberty? Whatsoever therefore your meaning was in these words, I cannot think you took this way to make me sensible of your kindness.

Your lordship says, " you were willing to allow me " to interpret my own sense." What you were willing to allow me to do, I have done. My sense is, that certainty consists in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of ideas; and my sense therein I have interpreted to be the agreement or disagreement, not only of perfectly clear and distinct ideas, but such ideas as we have, whether they be in all their parts perfectly clear and distinct or no. Farther, in answer to your objection, that it might be of dangerous consequence; I so explained my sense, as to show, that certainty in that sense was not, nor could be of dangerous consequence. This, which was the point in question between us, your lordship might have found at large explained in my second letter, if you had been pleased to have taken notice of it.

But it seems you were more willing to tell me, " that " though you were willing to allow me all ways of " inter-

" interpreting my own ſenſe, yet you by no means " thought that my words were wholly miſunderſtood or " miſapplied by that author, but rather that he ſaw into " the true conſequence of them as they lie in my book." I ſhall here ſet down your lordſhip's words, where (to give me and others ſatisfaction) you ſay, " you took care " to prevent being miſunderſtood," which will beſt appear by your own words, viz. " that you muſt do that " right to the ingenious author of the Eſſay of Human " Underſtanding, from whom theſe notions are bor- " rowed to ſerve other purpoſes than he intended them. " It was too plain, that the bold writer againſt the myſ- " teries of our faith, took his notions and expreſſions " from thence, and what could be ſaid more for my " vindication, than that he turned them to other pur- " poſes than the author intended them?" This you endeavoured to prove, and then concluded; " by which it " is ſufficiently proved, that you had reaſon to ſay, that " my notion was carried beyond my intention." Theſe words out of your firſt letter, I ſhall leave here, ſet by thoſe out of your ſecond, that you may at your leiſure, if you think fit (for it will not become me to tell your lordſhip that I am willing to allow it) explain yourſelf to the general ſatisfaction, that it may be known which of them is now your ſenſe; for they are, I ſuppoſe, too much to be together any one's ſenſe at the ſame time.

My intention being thus ſo well vindicated by your lordſhip, that you think nothing could be ſaid more for my vindication, the miſunderſtanding or not miſunderſtanding of my book, by that or any other author, is what I ſhall not waſte my time about. If your lordſhip thinks he ſaw into the true conſequence of this poſition of mine, that certainty conſiſts in the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of ideas (for it is from the inference that you ſuppoſe he makes from that my definition of knowledge, that you are here proving it to be of dangerous conſequence) he is beholden to your lordſhip for your good opinion of his quick ſight: I take no part in that, one way or other. What conſequences your lordſhip's quick ſight (which muſt be allowed to have out-done what you ſuppoſe of that gentleman's) has has found and charged on that notion as dangerous, I shall endeavour to give you satisfaction in.

You farther add, that "though I answered not a word "in the proper place, yet afterwards, Let. 2. p. 95. (for "you would omit nothing that may seem to help my "cause) I offer something towards an answer."

I shall be at a loss hereafter what to do with the 82d and following pages to the 95th; since what is said in those pages of my second letter goes for nothing, because it is not in its proper place. Though if any one will give himself the trouble to look into my second letter, he will find, that the argument I was upon in the 46th page obliged me to defer what I had farther to say to your new accusation: but that I re-assumed it in the 82d, and answered it in that and the following pages.

But supposing every writer had not that exactness of method, which showed, by the natural and visible connexion of the parts of his discourse, that every thing was laid in its proper place; is it a sufficient answer, not to take any notice of it? The reason why I put this question, is, because if this be a rule in controversy, I humbly conceive, I might have passed over the greatest part of what your lordship has said to me, because the disposition it has under numerical figures, is so far from giving me a view of the orderly connexion of the parts of your discourse, that I have often been tempted to suspect the negligence of the printer, for misplacing your lordship's numbers; since so ranked as they are, they do to me, who am confounded by them, lose all order and connexion quite.

The next thing in the defence, which you go on with, is an exception to my use of the word certainty. In the close of the answer I had made in the pages you pass over, I add, "that though the laws of disputation allow "bare denials as a sufficient answer to sayings without "any offer of a proof; yet, my lord, to show how wil-"ling I am to give your lordship all satisfaction in what "you apprehend may be of dangerous consequence in "my book, as to that article, I shall not stand still "sullenly, and put your lordship upon the difficulty of "showing wherein that danger lies; but shall on the "other side endeavour to show your lordship, that that

" definition of mine, whether true or falſe, right or wrong, " can be of no dangerous conſequence to that arti- " cle of faith. The reaſon which I ſhall offer for it, is " this; becauſe it can be of no conſequence to it at all." And the reaſon of it was clear from what I had ſaid before, that knowing and believing were two different acts of the mind: and that my placing of certainty in the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of ideas, i. e. that my definition of knowledge, one of thoſe acts of the mind; would not at all alter or ſhake the definition of faith, which was another act of the mind diſtinct from it. And therefore I added, " that the certainty " of faith (if your lordſhip thinks fit to call it ſo) has " nothing to do with the certainty of knowledge. And " to talk of the certainty of faith, ſeems all one to me, " as to talk of the knowledge of believing; a way of " ſpeaking not eaſy to me to underſtand."

Theſe and other words to this purpoſe in the following paragraphs your lordſhip lays hold on, and ſets down as liable to no ſmall exception: though, as you tell me, " the main ſtrength of my defence lies in it." Let what ſtrength you pleaſe lie in it, my defence was ſtrong enough without it. For to your bare ſaying, " my " method of certainty might be of dangerous conſe- " quence to any article of the chriſtian faith," without proving it, it was a defence ſtrong enough barely to deny, and put you upon ſhowing wherein that danger lies; which therefore, this main ſtrength of my defence, as you call it, apart, I inſiſt on.

But as to your exception to what I ſaid on this occaſion, it conſiſts in this, that there is a certainty of faith, and therefore you ſet down my ſaying, " that to talk of " the certainty of faith, ſeems all one as to talk of the " knowledge of believing;" as that " which ſhows the " inconſiſtency of my notion of ideas with the articles " of the chriſtian faith." Theſe are your words here, and yet you tell me, " that it is not my way of ideas but " my way of certainty by ideas, that your lordſhip is " unſatisfied about." What muſt I do now in the caſe, when your words are expreſly, that my notion of ideas have an inconſiſtency with the articles of the chriſtian faith?

faith? Must I presume that your lordship means my notion of certainty? All that I can do, is to search out your meaning the best I can, and then show where I apprehend it not conclusive. But this uncertainty, in most places, what you mean, makes me so much work, that a great deal is omitted, and yet my answer is too long.

Your lordship asks in the next paragraph, "how "comes the certainty of faith to be so hard a point "with me?" Answ. I suppose you ask this question more to give others hard thoughts of my opinion of faith, than to be informed yourself. For you cannot be ignorant that all along in my Essay I use certainty for knowledge; so that for you to ask me, "how comes the "certainty of faith to become so hard a point with me?" is the same thing as for you to ask, how comes the knowledge of faith, or if you please, the knowledge of believing, to be so hard a point with me? A question which, I suppose, you will think needs no answer, let your meaning in that doubtful phrase be what it will.

I used in my book the term certainty for knowledge so generally, that nobody that has read my book, though much less attentively than your lordship, can doubt of it. That I used it in that sense there, I shall refer my reader but to two places amongst many to convince him. This, I am sure, your lordship could not be ignorant of, that by certainty I mean knowledge, since I have so used it in my letters to you, instances whereof are not a few; some of them may be found in the places marked in the margent: and in my second letter, what I say in the leaf immediately preceding that which you quote upon this occasion, would have put it past a possibility for any one to make show of a doubt of it, had not that been amongst those pages of my answer, which, for its being out of its proper place, it seems you were resolved not to take notice of; and therefore I hope it will not be besides my purpose here to mind you of it again.

B. 4. c. 1. § 1. and c. 11. § 9.

After having said something to show why I used certainty and knowledge for the same thing, I added, "that "your lordship could not but take notice of this in the "18th sect. of chap. iv. of my fourth book, it being a

" paſſage you had quoted, and runs thus: Wherever " we perceive the agreement or diſagreement of any of " our ideas, there is certain knowledge; and wherever " we are ſure thoſe ideas agree with the reality of things, " there is certain real knowledge: of which having " given the marks, I think I have ſhown wherein cer- " tainty, real certainty, conſiſts." And I farther add, in the immediately following words, " that my defini- " tion of knowledge, in the beginning of the fourth " book of my Eſſay, ſtands thus: Knowledge ſeems to " be nothing but the perception of the connexion, and " agreement or diſagreement, and repugnancy of any " of our ideas." Which is the very definition of certainty, that your lordſhip is here conteſting.

Since then you could not but know that in this diſcourſe, certainty with me ſtood for, or was the ſame thing with knowledge; may not one juſtly wonder how you come to aſk me ſuch a queſtion as this, " how " comes the knowledge of believing to become ſo hard " a point with me?" For that was in effect the queſtion that you aſked, when you put in the term certainty, ſince you knew as undoubtedly that I meant knowledge by certainty, as that I meant believing by faith; i. e. you could doubt of neither. And that you did not doubt of it, is plain from what you ſay in the next page, where you endeavour to prove this an improper way of ſpeaking.

Whether it be a proper way of ſpeaking, I allow it to be a fair queſtion. But when you knew what I meant, though I expreſſed it improperly, to put queſtions in a word of mine, uſed in a ſenſe different from mine, which could not but be apt to inſinuate to the reader, that my notion of certainty derogated from the πληροφορία or full aſſurance of faith, as the ſcripture calls it; is what I gueſs, in another, would make your lordſhip aſk again, " is this fair and ingenuous dealing?"

My lord, my Bible expreſſes the higheſt degree of faith, which the apoſtle recommended to believers in his time, by full aſſurance. But aſſurance of faith, though it be what aſſurance ſoever, will by no means down with your lordſhip in my writing.

Heb. x. 22.

ing. You say, I allow assurance of faith; God forbid I should do otherwise; but then you ask, "why not cer"tainty as well as assurance?" My lord, I think it may be a reason not misbecoming a poor layman, and such as he might presume would satisfy a bishop of the church of England, that he found his Bible to speak so. I find my Bible speaks of the assurance of faith, but no where, that I can remember, of the certainty of faith, though in many places it speaks of the certainty of knowledge, and therefore I speak so too; and shall not, I think, be condemned for keeping close to the expressions of our Bible, though the scripture-language, as it is, does not so well serve your lordship's turn in the present case. When I shall see, in an authentic translation of our Bible, the phrase changed, it will then be time enough for me to change it too, and call it not the assurance, but certainty of faith: but till then, I shall not be ashamed of it, notwithstanding you reproach me with it, by terming it, the assurance of faith, as I call it; when you might as well have termed it, the assurance of faith, as your Bible calls it.

It being plain, that by certainty I meant knowledge, and by faith the act of believing; that these words where you ask, "how comes the certainty of faith to become "so hard a point with me?" and where you tell me, "I "will allow no certainty of faith;" may make no wrong impression on men's minds, who may be apt to understand them of the object, and not merely of the act of believing: I crave leave to say with Mr. Chillingworth,
"that I do heartily acknowledge and be- C. vi. § 3.
"lieve the articles of our faith to be in "themselves truths as certain and infallible, as the very "common principles of geometry or metaphysics. But "that there is not required of us a knowledge of them,
"and an adherence to them, as certain as that of sense
"or science:" and that for this reason (amongst others given both by Mr. Chillingworth and Mr. Hooker) viz. "that faith is not knowledge, no more than "three is four, but eminently contained in it: so that "he that knows, believes, and something more; but "he that believes, many times does not know; nay, if

" he doth barely and merely believe, he doth never " know." Theſe are Mr. Chillingworth's own words. C. vi. § 2.

That this aſſurance of faith may approach very near to certainty, and not come ſhort of it in a ſure and ſteady influence on the mind, I have ſo plainly declared, that nobody, I think, can queſtion it. In my chapter of reaſon, which has received the honour of your lordſhip's animadverſions, I ſay of ſome propoſitions wherein knowledge [i. e. in my ſenſe, certainty] fails us, " that their probability " is ſo clear and ſtrong, that aſſent as neceſſarily follows, " as knowledge does demonſtration." Does your lordſhip aſcribe any greater certainty than this to an article of mere faith? If you do not, we are it ſeems agreed in the thing; and ſo all, that you have ſo emphatically ſaid about it, is but to correct a miſtake of mine in the Engliſh tongue, if it prove to be one: a weighty point, and well worth your lordſhip's beſtowing ſo many pages upon. I ſay mere faith, becauſe though a man may be a chriſtian, who merely believes that there is a God, yet that is not an article of mere faith, becauſe it may be demonſtrated that there is a God, and ſo may certainly be known. Eſſay, b. iv. c. xvii. § 16.

Your lordſhip goes on to aſk, " have not all man- " kind, who have talked of matters of faith, allowed a " certainty of faith as well as a certainty of knowledge?" To anſwer a queſtion concerning what all mankind, who have talked of faith, have done, may be within the reach of your great learning: as for me, my reading reaches not ſo far. The apoſtles and the evangeliſts, I can anſwer, have talked of matters of faith, but I do not find in my Bible that they have any where ſpoken (for it is of ſpeaking here the queſtion is) of the certainty of faith; and what they allow, which they do not ſpeak of, I cannot tell. I ſay, in my Bible, meaning the Engliſh tranſlation uſed in our church: though what all mankind, who ſpeak not of faith in Engliſh, can do towards the deciding of this queſtion, I do not ſee; it being about the ſignification of an Engliſh word. And whether in propriety of ſpeech it can be applied to faith, can only be decided by thoſe who underſtand Engliſh, which all mankind, who have talked of matters of faith, I humbly conceive, did not.

can

To prove that certainty in Engliſh may be applied to faith, you ſay, that among the Romans it was oppoſed to doubting; and for that you bring this Latin ſentence, "Nil tam certum eſt quam quod de dubio certum." Anſw. Certum, among the Romans, might be oppoſed to doubting, and yet not be applied to faith, becauſe knowledge, as well as believing, is oppoſed to doubting: and therefore unleſs it had pleaſed your lordſhip to have quoted the author out of which this Latin ſentence is taken, one cannot tell whether certum be not in it ſpoken of a thing known, and not of a thing believed: though if it were ſo, I humbly conceive, it would not prove what you ſay, viz. that "it," i. e. the word certainty (for to that "it" muſt refer here, or to nothing that I underſtand) was among the Romans applied to faith; for, as I take it, they never uſed the Engliſh word certainty: and though it be true, that the Engliſh word certainty be taken from the Latin word certus, yet that therefore certainty in Engliſh is uſed exactly in the ſame ſenſe that certus is in Latin, that I think you will not ſay; for then certainty in Engliſh muſt ſignify purpoſe and reſolution of mind, for to that certus is applied in Latin.

You are pleaſed here to tell me, "that in my former "letter" I ſaid, "that if we knew the original of words, "we ſhould be much helped to the ideas they were firſt "applied to, and made to ſtand for." I grant it true, nor ſhall I unſay it here. For I ſaid not, that a word that had its original in one language, kept always exactly the ſame ſignification in another language, into which it was from thence tranſplanted. But if you will give me leave to remind you of it, I remember that you, my lord, ſay in the ſame place, "that little weight is to be "laid upon a bare grammatical etymology, when a "word is uſed in another ſenſe by the beſt authors." And I think you could not have brought a more proper inſtance to verify that ſaying, than that which you produce here.

But pray, my lord, why so far about? Why are we sent to the antient Romans? Why must we consult (which is no easy task) all mankind, who have talked of faith, to know whether certainty be properly used for faith or no; when to determine it between your lordship and me, there is so sure a remedy, and so near at hand? It is but for you to say wherein certainty consists. This, when I gently offered to your lordship in my first letter, you interpreted it to be a design to draw you out of your way.

I am sorry, my lord, you should think it out of your way to put an end, a short end to a controversy, which you think of such moment: methinks it should not be out of your way, with one blow finally to overthrow an assertion, which you think "to be of dangerous conse-"quence to that article of faith, which your lordship "has endeavoured to defend." I proposed the same again, where I say, "for this there is a very easy remedy: "it is but for your lordship to set aside this definition "of knowledge, by giving us a better, and this danger "is over. But you choose rather to have a controversy "with my book, for having it in it, and to put me "upon the defence of it." This is so express, that your taking no notice of it, puts me at a loss what to think. To say that a man so great in letters does not know wherein certainty consists, is a greater presumption than I will be guilty of; and yet to think that you do know and will not tell, is yet harder. Who can think, or will dare to say, that your lordship, so much concerned for the articles of faith, and engaged in this dispute with me, by your duty, for the preservation of them, should choose to keep up a controversy with me, rather than remove that danger, which my wrong notion of certainty threatens to the articles of faith? For, my lord, since the question is moved, and it is brought by your lordship to a public dispute, wherein certainty consists, a great many knowing no better, may take up with what I have said; and rather than have no notion of certainty at all, will stick by mine, till a better be showed them. And if mine tends to scepticism, as you say, and you will not furnish them with one that does not, not, what is it but to give way to scepticism, and let it quietly prevail on men, as either having my notion of certainty, or none at all? Your lordship indeed says something in excuse, in your 75th page; which, that my answer may be in the proper place, shall be considered when we come there.

Your lordship declares, "that you are utterly against "any private mints of words." I know not what the public may do for your particular satisfaction in the case; but till public mints of words are erected, I know no remedy for it, but that you must patiently suffer this matter to go on in the same course, that I think it has gone in ever since language has been in use. Here in this island, as far as my knowledge reaches, I do not find, that ever since the Saxons time, in the alterations that have been made in our language, that any one word or phrase has had its authority from the great seal, or passed by act of parliament.

When the dazzling metaphor of the mint and new milled words, &c. (which mightily, as it seems, delighted your lordship when you were writing that paragraph) will give you leave to consider this matter plainly as it is, you will find, that the coining of money in publicly authorized mints affords no manner of argument against private men's meddling in the introducing new, or changing the signification of old words; every one of which alterations always has its rise from some private mint. The case in short is this; money, by virtue of the stamp received in the public mint, which vouches its intrinsic worth, has authority to pass. This use of the public stamp would be lost, if private men were suffered to offer money stamped by themselves. On the contrary, words are offered to the public by every man, coined in his private mint, as he pleases; but it is the receiving of them by others, their very passing that gives them their authority and currency, and not the mint they come out of. Horace, I think, has given a true account of this matter, in a country very jealous of any usurpation upon the public authority: De Arte Poet.

" Multa renaſcentur, quæ jam cecidere, cadentque;
" Quæ nunc ſunt in honore vocabula, ſi volet uſus,
" Quem penes arbitrium eſt & jus, & norma loquendi."

But yet whatever change is made in the ſignification or credit of any word by public uſe, this change has always its beginning in ſome private mint: ſo Horace tells us it was in the Roman language quite down to his time:

—— " Ego cur acquirere pauca,
" Si poſſum, invideor; quum lingua Catonis & Enni
" Sermonem patrium ditaverit, & nova rerum
" Nomina protulerit? Licuit, ſemperque licebit:
" Signatum præſente nota procudere nomen."

Here we ſee Horace expreſly ſays, that private mints of words were always licenſed; and, with Horace, I humbly conceive ſo they will always continue, how utterly ſoever your lordſhip may be againſt them. And therefore he that offers to the public new milled words from his own private mint, is not always in that ſo bold an invader of the public authority, as you would make him.

This I ſay not to excuſe myſelf in the preſent caſe; for I deny, that I have at all changed the ſignification of the word certainty. And therefore, if you had pleaſed, you might, my lord, have ſpared your ſaying on this occaſion, " that it ſeems our old words muſt not now paſs " in the current ſenſe; and thoſe perſons aſſume too " much authority to themſelves, who will not ſuffer " common words to paſs in their general acceptation:" and other things to the ſame purpoſe in this paragraph, till you had proved that in ſtrict propriety of ſpeech it could be ſaid, that a man was certain of that which he did not know, but only believed.

If you had had time, in the heat of diſpute, to have made a little reflection on the uſe of the Engliſh word certainty in ſtrict ſpeaking, perhaps your lordſhip would not have been ſo forward to have made my uſing it, only for preciſe knowledge, ſo enormous an impropriety; at leaſt leaſt you would not have accuſed it of weakening the credibility of any article of faith.

It is true indeed, people commonly ſay, they are certain of what they barely believe, without doubting. But it is as true, that they as commonly ſay that they know it too. But nobody from thence concludes, that believing is knowing. As little can they conclude from the like vulgar way of ſpeaking, that believing is certainty. All that is meant thereby is no more but this, that the full aſſurance of their faith as ſteadily determines their aſſent to the embracing of that truth, as if they actually knew it.

But however ſuch phraſes as theſe are uſed to ſhow the ſteadineſs and aſſurance of their faith, who thus ſpeak; yet they alter not the propriety of our language, which I think appropriates certainty only to knowledge, when in ſtrict and philoſophical diſcourſe it is, upon that account, contra-diſtinguiſhed to faith; as in this caſe here your lordſhip knows it is: whereof there is an expreſs evidence in my firſt letter, where I ſay, "that I ſpeak of "belief, and your lordſhip of certainty; and that I "meant belief, and not certainty. And that I made "not an improper, nor unjuſtifiable uſe of the word, "certainty, in contra-diſtinguiſhing it thus to faith, I "think I have an unqueſtionable authority, in the "learned and cautious Dr. Cudworth, who ſo uſes it: "What eſſence, ſays he, is to generation, the ſame is "certainty of truth, or knowledge, to faith," p. $\frac{132}{155}$.

Your lordſhip ſays, "certainty is common to both "knowledge and faith, unleſs I think it impoſſible to "be certain upon any teſtimony whatſoever." I think it is poſſible to be certain upon the teſtimony of God (for that, I ſuppoſe, you mean) where I know that it is the teſtimony of God; becauſe in ſuch a caſe, that teſtimony is capable not only to make me believe, but, if I conſider it right, to make me know the thing to be ſo; and ſo I may be certain. For the veracity of God is as capable of making me know a propoſition to be true, as any other way of proof can be; and therefore I do not in ſuch a caſe barely believe, but know ſuch a propoſition to be true, and attain certainty.

The

The sum of your accusation is drawn up thus: "that "I have appropriated certainty to the perception of the "agreement or disagreement of ideas in any proposi- "tion; and now I find this will not hold as to articles "of faith; and therefore I will allow no certainty of "faith; which you think is not for the advantage of "my cause." The truth of the matter of fact is in short this, that I have placed knowledge in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of ideas. This definition of knowledge, your lordship said, "might be "of dangerous consequence to that article of faith, "which you have endeavoured to defend." This I denied, and gave this reason for it, viz. that a definition of knowledge, whether a good or bad, true or false definition, could not be of ill or any consequence to an article of faith: because a definition of knowledge, which was one act of the mind, did not at all concern faith, which was another act of the mind quite distinct from it. To this then, which was the proposition in question between us, your lordship, I humbly conceive, should have answered. But instead of that, your lordship, by the use of the word certainty in a sense that I used it not, (for you knew I used it only for knowledge) would represent me as having strange notions of faith. Whether this be for the advantage of your cause, your lordship will do well to consider.

Upon such an use of the word certainty in a different sense from what I used it in, the force of all your lordship says under your first head, contained in the two or three next paragraphs, depends, as I think; for I must own (pardon my dulness) that I do not clearly comprehend the force of what your lordship there says: and it will take up too many pages to examine it period by period. In short therefore, I take your lordship's meaning to be this:

"That there are some articles of faith, viz. the fun- "damental principles of natural religion, which man- "kind may attain to a certainty in by reason, without "revelation; which, because a man that proceeds upon "my grounds cannot attain to a certainty in by reason, "their credibility to him, when they are considered as "purely

" purely matters of faith, will be weakened." Those which your lordship instances in, are the being of a God, providence, and the rewards and punishments of a future state.

This is the way, as I humbly conceive, your lordship takes here to prove my grounds of certainty (for so you call my definition of knowledge) to be of dangerous consequence to the articles of faith.

To avoid ambiguity and confusion in the examining this argument of your lordship's, the best way, I humbly conceive, will be to lay by the term certainty; which your lordship and I using in different senses, is the less fit to make what we say to one another clearly understood; and instead thereof, to use the term knowledge, which with me, your lordship knows, is equivalent.

Your lordship's proposition then, as far as it has any opposition to me, is this, that if knowledge be supposed to consist in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of ideas, a man cannot attain to the knowledge that these propositions, viz. " that there is a God, a " providence, and rewards and punishments in a future " state, are true; and therefore the credibility of these " articles, considered purely as matters of faith, will be " weakened to him." Wherein there are these things to be proved by your lordship.

1. That upon my grounds of knowledge, i. e. upon a supposition that knowledge consists in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of ideas, we cannot attain to the knowledge of the truth of either of those propositions, viz. " that there is a God, providence, " and rewards and punishments in a future state."

2. Your lordship is to prove, that the not knowing the truth of any proposition lessens the credibility of it; which, in short, amounts to this, that want of knowledge lessens faith in any proposition proposed. This is the proposition to be proved, if your lordship uses certainty in the sense I use it, i. e. for knowledge; in which only use of it, will it here bear upon me.

But since I find your lordship, in these two or three paragraphs, to use the word certainty in so uncertain a sense, as sometimes to signify knowledge by it, and some-sometimes believing in general, i. e. any degree of believing; give me leave to add, that if your lordship means by these words, "let us suppose a person by natural reason to attain to a certainty as to the being of "a God, i. e. attain to a belief that there is a God, "&c. or the soul's immortality:" I say, if you take certainty in such a sense, then it will be incumbent upon your lordship to prove, that if a man finds the natural reason whereupon he entertained the belief of a God, or of the immortality of the soul, uncertain, that will weaken the credibility of those fundamental articles, as matters of faith: or, which is in effect the same, that the weakness of the credibility of any article of faith from reason, weakens the credibility of it from revelation. For it is this which these following words of yours import: "for before, there was a natural credibility in "them on the account of reason; but by going on wrong "grounds of certainty, all that is lost."

To prove the first of these propositions, viz. that upon the supposition that knowledge consists in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of ideas, we cannot attain to the knowledge of the truth of this proposition, that there is a God; your lordship argues, that I have said, "that no idea proves the existence of the "thing without itself:" which argument reduced to form, will stand thus; if it be true, as I say, that no idea proves the existence of the thing without itself, then upon the supposition that knowledge consists in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of ideas, we cannot attain to the knowledge of the truth of this proposition, "that there is a God:" which argument so manifestly proves not, that there needs no more to be said to it, than to desire that consequence to be proved.

Again, as to the immortality of the soul, your lordship urges, that I have said, that I cannot know but that matter may think; therefore upon my ground of knowledge, i. e. upon a supposition that knowledge consists in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of ideas, there is an end of the soul's immortality. This consequence I must also desire your lordship to prove. Only I crave leave by the by to point out some things in these paragraphs, too remarkable to be passed over without any notice.

in

One is, that you "suppose a man is made certain "upon my grounds of certainty," i. e. knows by the perception of the agreement or disagreement of ideas, that there is a God; and yet, "upon a farther examina- "tion of my method, he finds that the way of ideas will "not do." Here, my lord, if by my grounds of certainty, my methods, and my way of ideas, you mean one and the same thing; then your words will have a consistency, and tend to the same point. But then I must beg your lordship to consider, that your supposition carries a contradiction in it, viz. that your lordship supposes, that by my grounds, my method, and my way of certainty, a man is made certain, and not made certain, that there is a God. If your lordship means here by my grounds of certainty, my method, and my way of ideas, different things, (as it seems to me you do) then, whatever your lordship may suppose here, it makes nothing to the point in hand; which is to show, that by this my ground of certainty, viz. that knowledge consists in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of ideas, a man first attains to a knowledge that there is a God, and afterwards by the same grounds of certainty he comes to lose the knowledge that there is a God; which to me seems little less than a contradiction.

It is likely your lordship will say you mean no such thing; for you allege this proposition, "that no idea "proves the existence of any thing without itself;" and give that as an instance, that my way of ideas will not do, i. e. will not prove the being of a God. It is true, your lordship does so. But withal, my lord, it is as true, that this proposition, supposing it to be mine, (for it is not here set down in my words) contains not my method, or way, or notion of certainty; though it is in that sense alone, that it can here be useful to your lordship to call it my method, or the way by ideas.

Your lordship undertakes to show, that my defining knowledge to consist in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of ideas, "weakens the credibility of "this fundamental article of faith," that there is a God: what what is your lordſhip's proof of it? Juſt this: the ſaying that no idea proves the exiſtence of the thing without itſelf, will not do; ergo, the ſaying that knowledge conſiſts in the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of ideas, weakens the credibility of this fundamental article. This, my lord, ſeems to me no proof; and all that I can find, that is offered to make it a proof, is only your calling theſe propoſitions "my general grounds of "certainty, my method of proceeding, the way of ideas, "and my own principles in point of reaſon;" as if that made theſe two propoſitions the ſame thing, and whatſoever were a conſequence of one, may be charged as a conſequence of the other; though it be viſible, that though the latter of theſe be ever ſo falſe, or ever ſo far from being a proof of a God, yet it will by no means thence follow, that the former of them, viz. that knowledge conſiſts in the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of ideas, weakens the credibility of that fundamental article. But it is but for your lordſhip to call them both "the way of ideas," and that is enough.

That I may not be accuſed by your lordſhip "for "unfair and diſingenuous dealing, for repreſenting this "matter ſo;" I ſhall here ſet down your lordſhip's words at large: "let us now ſuppoſe a perſon by natural "reaſon to attain to a certainty, as to the being of a "God, and immortality of the ſoul; and he proceeds "upon J. L's general grounds of certainty, from the "agreement or diſagreement of ideas: and ſo from the "ideas of God and the ſoul, he is made certain of theſe "two points before-mentioned. But let us again ſup-"poſe that ſuch a perſon, upon a farther examination "of J. L's method of proceeding, finds that the way "of ideas in theſe caſes will not do: for no idea proves "the exiſtence of the thing without itſelf, no more "than the picture of a man proves his being, or the "viſions of a dream make a true hiſtory; (which are "J. L's own expreſſions). And for the ſoul he cannot "be certain, but that matter may think, (as J. L. af-"firms) and then what becomes of the ſoul's immate-"riality (and conſequently immortality) from its ope-"rations? But for all this, ſays J. L. his aſſurance of "faith

" faith remains firm on its basis. Now you appeal to " any man of sense, whether the finding the uncertainty " of his own principles, which he went upon in point " of reason, doth not weaken the credibility of these " fundamental articles, when they are considered purely " as matters of faith? For before, there was a natural " credibility in them on the account of reason; but by " going on wrong grounds of certainty, all that is lost; " and instead of being certain, he is more doubtful than " ever." These are your lordship's own words; and now I appeal to any man of sense, whether they contain any other argument against my placing of certainty as I do, but this, viz. a man mistakes and thinks that this proposition, no idea proves the existence of the thing without itself, shows that in the way of ideas one cannot prove a God: ergo, this proposition, " certainty consists " in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of " ideas, weakens the credibility of this fundamental " article, that there is a God." And so of the immortality of the soul; because I say, I know not but matter may think: your lordship would infer, ergo, my definition of certainty weakens the credibility of the revelation of the soul's immortality.

Your lordship is pleased here to call this proposition, " that knowledge or certainty consists in the perception " of the agreement or disagreement of ideas," my general grounds of certainty; as if I had some more particular grounds of certainty. Whereas I have no other ground or notion of certainty, but this one alone; all my notion of certainty is contained in that one particular proposition: but perhaps your lordship did it, that you might make the proposition above-quoted, viz. " no idea proves the existence of the thing without " itself," under the title you give it, of " the way of " ideas," pass for one of my particular grounds of certainty; whereas it is no more any ground of certainty of mine, or definition of knowledge, than any other proposition in my book.

Another thing very remarkable in what your lordship here says, is, that you make the failing to attain knowledge by any way of certainty in some particular instances, to be the finding the uncertainty of the way itself; which is all one as to say, that if a man misses by algebra the certain knowledge of some propositions in mathematics, therefore he finds the way or principles of algebra to be uncertain or false. This is your lordship's way of reasoning here: your lordship quotes out of me, "that "I say no idea proves the existence of the thing with- "out itself;" and that I say, "that one cannot be cer- "tain that matter cannot think:" from whence your lordship argues, that he who says so, cannot attain to certainty that there is a God, or that the soul is immortal; and thereupon your lordship concludes, "he "finds the uncertainty of the principles he went upon, "in point of reason," i. e. that he finds this principle or ground of certainty he went upon in reasoning, viz. that certainty or knowledge consists in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of ideas, to be uncertain. For if your lordship means here, by "principles "he went upon in point of reason," any thing else but that definition of knowledge, which your lordship calls my way, method, grounds, &c. of certainty, which I and others, to the endangering some articles of faith, go upon; I crave leave to say, it concerns nothing at all the argument your lordship is upon, which is to prove, that the placing of certainty in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of ideas may be of dangerous consequence to any article of faith.

to

Your lordship, in the next place, says, "before we "can believe any thing, upon the account of revela- "tion, we must suppose there is a God." What use does your lordship make of this? Your lordship thus argues; but by my way of certainty, a man is made uncertain whether there be a God or no: for that to me is the meaning of those words, "how can his faith stand "firm as to divine revelation, when he is made uncer- "tain by his own way, whether there be a God or no?" or they can to me mean nothing to the question in hand. What is the conclusion from hence? This it must be, or nothing to the purpose; ergo, my definition of knowledge, or, which is the same thing, my placing of certainty in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of ideas, leaves not the articles of faith the same credibility they had before.

ment

To excuse my dulness in not being able to comprehend this consequence, pray, my lord, consider, that your lordship says; "before we can believe any thing "upon the account of revelation, it must be supposed "that there is a God." But cannot he, who places certainty in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of ideas, suppose there is a God?

But your lordship means by "suppose," that one must be certain that there is a God. Let it be so, and let it be your lordship's privilege in controversy to use one word for another, though of a different signification, as I think to "suppose" and "be certain" are. Cannot one that places certainty in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of ideas, be certain there is a God? I can assure you, my lord, I am certain there is a God; and yet I own, that I place certainty in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of ideas: nay, I dare venture to say to your lordship, that I have proved there is a God, and see no inconsistency at all between these two propositions, that certainty consists in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of ideas, and that it is certain there is a God. So that this my notion of certainty, this definition of knowledge, for any thing your lordship has said to the contrary, leaves to this fundamental article the same credibility, and the same certainty it had before.

Your lordship says farther, "to suppose divine reve-"lation, we must be certain that there is a principle "above matter and motion in the world." Here, again, my lord, your way of writing makes work for my ignorance; and before I can either admit or deny this proposition, or judge what force it has to prove the proposition in question, I must distinguish it into these different senses, which I think your lordship's way of speaking may comprehend. For your lordship may mean it thus, "to suppose divine revelation, we must be certain, "i. e. we must believe that there is a principle above "matter and motion in the world." Or your lordship may mean thus, "we must be certain, i. e. we must " know that there is ſomething above matter and mo" tion in the world." In the next place your lordſhip may mean by ſomething above matter and motion, either ſimply an intelligent being; for knowledge, without determining what being it is in, is a principle above matter and motion: or your lordſhip may mean an immaterial intelligent being. So that this undetermined way of expreſſing includes at leaſt four diſtinct propoſitions, whereof ſome are true, and others not ſo. For,

1. My lord, if your lordſhip means, that to ſuppoſe a divine revelation, a man muſt be certain, i. e. muſt certainly know, that there is an intelligent being in the world, and that that intelligent being is immaterial from whence that revelation comes; I deny it. For a man may ſuppoſe revelation upon the belief of an intelligent being, from whence it comes, without being able to make out to himſelf, by a ſcientifical reaſoning, that there is ſuch a being. A proof whereof, I humbly conceive, are the anthropomorphites among the chriſtians heretofore, who nevertheleſs rejected not the revelation of the New Teſtament: and he that will talk with illiterate people in this age, will, I doubt not, find many who believe the Bible to be the word of God, though they imagine God himſelf in the ſhape of an old man ſitting in heaven; which they could not do, if they knew, i. e. had examined and underſtood any demonſtration whereby he is proved to be immaterial, without which they cannot know it.

2. If your lordſhip means, that to ſuppoſe a divine revelation, it is neceſſary to know, that there is ſimply an intelligent being; this alſo I deny. For to ſuppoſe a divine revelation, it is not neceſſary that a man ſhould know that there is ſuch an intelligent being in the world: I ſay, know, i. e. from things that he does know, demonſtratively deduce the proof of ſuch a being: it is enough for the receiving divine revelation, to believe, that there is ſuch a being, without having by demonſtration attained to the knowledge that there is a God. Every one that believes right, does not always reaſon exactly, eſpecially in abſtract metaphyſical ſpeculations: and if nobody can believe the Bible to be of divine revelation, but he that clearly comprehends the whole deduction, and ſees the evidence of the demonſtration, wherein the exiſtence of an intelligent being, on whoſe will all other beings depend, is ſcientifically proved; there are, I fear, but few chriſtians among illiterate people, to look no farther. He that believes there is a God, though he does no more than believe it, and has not attained to the certainty of knowledge, i. e. does not ſee the evident demonſtration of it, has ground enough to admit of divine revelation. The apoſtle tells us, "that he that will come to God, muſt believe that he "is;" but I do not remember the ſcripture any where ſays, that he muſt know that he is.

lation,

3. In the next place, if your lordſhip means, that "to "ſuppoſe divine revelation, a man muſt be certain," i. e. explicitly believe, that there is a perfectly immaterial being; I ſhall leave it to your lordſhip's conſideration, whether it may not be ground enough for the ſuppoſition of a revelation, to believe that there is an all-knowing unerring being, who can neither deceive nor be deceived, without a man's preciſely determining in his thoughts, whether that unerring omniſcient being be immaterial or no. It is paſt all doubt, that every one that examines and reaſons right, may come to a certainty, that God is perfectly immaterial. But it may be a queſtion, whether every one, who believes a revelation to be from God, may have entered into the diſquiſition of the immateriality of his being? Whether, I ſay, every ignorant day-labourer, who believes the Bible to be the word of God, has in his mind conſidered materiality and immateriality, and does explicitly believe God to be immaterial, I ſhall leave to your lordſhip to determine, if you think fit, more expreſly than your words do here.

4. If your lordſhip means, "that to ſuppoſe a divine "revelation, a man muſt be certain, i. e. believe that "there is a ſupreme intelligent being," from whence it comes, who can neither deceive nor be deceived; I grant it to be true.

Theſe being the ſeveral propoſitions, either of which may be meant in your lordſhip's ſo general, and to me doubtful, way of expreſſing yourſelf; to avoid the length, which a particular anſwer to each of them would run me into, I will venture (and it is a venture to anſwer to an ambiguous propoſition in one ſenſe, when the author has the liberty of ſaying he meant it in another; a great convenience of general, looſe, and doubtful expreſſions) I will, I ſay, venture to anſwer it, in the ſenſe I gueſs moſt ſuited to your lordſhip's purpoſe; and ſee what your lordſhip proves by it. I will therefore ſuppoſe your lordſhip's reaſoning to be this; that,

" To ſuppoſe divine revelation, a man muſt be cer" tain, i. e. believe that there is a principle above mat" ter and motion, i. e. an immaterial intelligent being " in the world." Let it be ſo; what does your lord-ſhip infer? " Therefore upon the principle of certainty
" by ideas, he [i. e. he that places certainty in the per" ception of the agreement or diſagreement of ideas]
" cannot be certain of [i. e. believe] this." This conſequence ſeems a little ſtrange, but your lordſhip proves it thus; " becauſe he does not know but matter may " think;" which argument, put into form, will ſtand thus:

If one who places certainty in the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of ideas, does not know but matter may think; then whoever places certainty ſo, cannot believe there is an immaterial intelligent being in the world.

But there is one who, placing certainty in the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of ideas, does not know but matter may think:

Ergo, whoever places certainty in the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of ideas, cannot think that there is an intelligent immaterial being.

This argumentation is ſo defective in every part of it, that for fear I ſhould be thought to make an argument for your lordſhip in requital for the anſwer your lord-ſhip made for me, I muſt deſire the reader to conſider, your lordſhip ſays, " we muſt be certain; he cannot be " certain, becauſe he doth not know:" which in ſhort is, he cannot becauſe he cannot; and he cannot becauſe he doth not. This conſidered will juſtify the ſyllogiſm I have

I have made to contain your lordſhip's argument in its full force.

I come therefore to the ſyllogiſm itſelf, and there firſt I deny the minor, which is this:

" There is one who, placing certainty in the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of ideas, doth not know but matter may think."

I begin with this, becauſe this is the foundation of all your lordſhip's argument; and therefore I deſire your lordſhip would produce any one, who, placing certainty in the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of ideas, does not know but matter may think.

The reaſon why I preſs this, is, becauſe, I ſuppoſe, your lordſhip means me here, and would have it thought that I ſay, I do not know but that matter may think: but that I do not ſay ſo; nor any thing elſe from whence may be inferred what your lordſhip adds in the annexed words, if they can be inferred from it; " and conſequently all revelation may be nothing but the effects of an exalted fancy, or the heats of a diſordered imagination, as Spinoſa affirmed." On the contrary, I do ſay, " it is impoſſible to conceive that matter, either with or without motion, could have originally in and from itſelf perception and knowledge." B. iv. c. 10. § 10. And having in that chapter eſtabliſhed this truth, that there is an eternal, immaterial, knowing being, I think nobody but your lordſhip could have imputed to me the doubting, that there was ſuch a being, becauſe I ſay in another place, and to another purpoſe, " it is impoſſible for us, by the contemplation of our own ideas, without revelation, to diſcover, whether omnipotency has not given to ſome ſyſtems of matter, fitly diſpoſed, a power to perceive and think, or elſe joined and fixed to matter ſo diſpoſed a thinking immaterial ſubſtance: it being in reſpect of our notions not much more remote from our comprehenſions to conceive, that God can, if he pleaſes, ſuperadd to our idea of matter a faculty of thinking, than that he ſhould ſuperadd to it another ſubſtance, with a faculty of thinking." B. iv. c. 3. § 6. From my ſaying thus, that that God (whom I have proved to be an immaterial being) by his omnipotency, may, for aught we know, ſuperadd to ſome parts of matter a faculty of thinking, it requires ſome ſkill for any one to repreſent me, as your lordſhip does here, as one ignorant or doubtful whether matter may not think; to that degree, "that "I am not certain, or I do not believe that there is a "principle above matter and motion in the world, and "conſequently all revelation may be nothing but the "effects of an exalted fancy, or the heats of a diſor-"dered imagination, as Spinoſa affirmed." For thus I, or ſomebody elſe (whom I deſire your lordſhip to produce) ſtands painted in this your lordſhip's argument from the ſuppoſition of a divine revelation; which your lordſhip brings here to prove, that the defining of knowledge, as I do, to conſiſt in the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of ideas, weakens the credibility of the articles of the chriſtian faith.

But if your lordſhip thinks it ſo dangerous a poſition to ſay, "it is not much harder for us to conceive, that "God can, if he pleaſes, ſuperadd to matter a faculty "of thinking, than that he ſhould ſuperadd to it an-"other ſubſtance with a faculty of thinking;" (which is the utmoſt I have ſaid concerning the faculty of thinking in matter:) I humbly conceive it would be more to your purpoſe to prove, that the infinite omnipotent Creator of all things out of nothing, cannot, if he pleaſes, ſuperadd to ſome parcels of matter, diſpoſed as he ſees fit, a faculty of thinking, which the reſt of matter has not; rather than to repreſent me, with that candour your lordſhip does, as one, who ſo far makes matter a thinking thing, as thereby to queſtion the being of a principle above matter and motion in the world, and conſequently to take away all revelation: which how natural and genuine a repreſentation it is of my ſenſe, expreſſed in the paſſages of my Eſſay, which I have above ſet down, I humbly ſubmit to the reader's judgment and your lordſhip's zeal for truth to determine; and ſhall not ſtay to examine whether man may not have an exalted fancy, and the heats of a diſordered imagination, equally overthrowing divine revelation, though the power of thinking be placed only in an immaterial substance.

power

I come now to the sequel of your major, which is this:

"If any one who places certainty in the perception "of the agreement or disagreement of ideas, does not "know but matter may think; then whoever places "certainty so, cannot believe there is an immaterial "intelligent being in the world."

The consequence here is from does not to cannot, which I cannot but wonder to find in an argument of your lordship's. For he that does not to-day believe or know, that matter cannot be so ordered by God's omnipotency, as to think (if that subverts the belief of an immaterial intelligent being in the world) may know or believe it to-morow; or if he should never know or believe it, yet others who define knowledge as he does, may know or believe it. Unless your lordship can prove, that it is impossible for any one, who defines knowledge to consist in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of ideas, to know or believe that matter cannot think. But this, as I remember, your lordship has not attempted any where to prove. And yet without this, your lordship's way of reasoning is no more than to argue, one cannot do a thing because another does not do it. And yet upon this strange consequence is built all that your lordship brings here to prove, that my definition of knowledge weakens the credibility of articles of faith, v. g.

It weakens the credibility of this fundamental article of faith, that there is a God! How so? Because I who have so defined knowledge, say in my Essay, "That the "knowledge of the existence of any other "thing [but of God] we can have only by "sensation; for there being no necessary "connexion of real existence with any idea a man hath "in his memory, nor of any other existence but that of "God, with the existence of any particular man; no "particular man can know the existence of any other "being, but only when, by actual operating upon him, it "makes itself perceived by him: for the having the "idea of any thing in our mind, no more proves the

B. 4. c. 11. § 1.

" exiſtence of that thing, than the picture of a man " evidences his being in the world, or the viſions of a " dream make thereby a true hiſtory." For ſo are the words of my book, and not as your lordſhip has been pleaſed to ſet them down here: and they were well choſen by your lordſhip, to ſhow that the way of ideas would not do; i. e. in my way of ideas, I cannot prove there is a God.

But ſuppoſing I had ſaid in that place, or any other, that which would hinder the proof of a God, as I have not, might I not ſee my errour, and alter or renounce that opinion, without changing my definition of knowledge? Or could not another man, who defined knowledge as I do, avoid thinking, as your lordſhip ſays I ſay, " that no idea proves the exiſtence of the thing " without itſelf;" and ſo be able, notwithſtanding my ſaying ſo, to prove that there is a God?

Again, your lordſhip argues, that my definition of knowledge weakens the credibility of the articles of faith, becauſe it takes away revelation; and your proof of that is, " becauſe I do not know, whether matter " may not think."

The ſame ſort of argumentation your lordſhip goes on with in the next page, where you ſay; " again, before " there can be any ſuch thing as aſſurance of faith upon " divine revelation, there muſt be a certainty as to ſenſe " and tradition; for there can be no revelation pre- " tended now, without immediate inſpiration: and the " baſis of our faith is a revelation contained in an ancient " book, whereof the parts were delivered at diſtant " times, but conveyed down to us by an univerſal tra- " dition. But now, what if my grounds of certainty " can give us no aſſurance as to theſe things? Your " lordſhip ſays you do not mean, that they cannot de- " monſtrate matters of fact, which it were moſt unrea- " ſonable to expect, but that theſe grounds of certainty " make all things uncertain; for your lordſhip thinks " you have proved, that this way of ideas cannot give " a ſatisfactory account, as to the exiſtence of the plain- " eſt objects of ſenſe; becauſe reaſon cannot perceive " the connexion between the objects and the ideas: how

" then

" then can we arrive to any certainty in perceiving " those objects by their ideas?"

All the force of which argument lies in this, that I have said (or am supposed to have said, or to hold; for that I ever said so, I do not remember) that " reason " cannot perceive the connexion between the objects " and the ideas:" Ergo, whoever holds that knowledge consists in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of ideas, cannot have any assurance of faith upon divine revelation.

My lord, let that proposition, viz. " that reason can- " not perceive the connexion between the objects and " the ideas," be mine as much as your lordship pleases, and let it be as inconsistent as you please, with the assurance of faith upon divine revelation: how will it follow from thence, that the placing of certainty in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of ideas is the cause that there " cannot be any such thing as the assur- " ance of faith upon divine revelation" to any body? Though I who hold knowledge to consist in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of ideas, have the misfortune to run into this errour, viz. " that rea- " son cannot perceive the connexion between the ob- " jects and the ideas," which is inconsistent with the assurance of faith upon divine revelation; yet it is not necessary that all others who with me hold, that certainty consists in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of ideas, should also hold, " that reason " cannot perceive the connexion between the objects " and the ideas," or that I myself should always hold it; unless your lordship will say, that whoever places certainty, as I do, in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of ideas, must necessarily hold all the errours that I do, which are inconsistent with, or weaken the belief of any article of faith, and hold them incorrigibly. Which has as much consequence, as if I should argue, that because your lordship, who lives at Worcester, does sometimes mistake in quoting me; therefore nobody who lives at Worcester can quote my words right, or your lordship can never mend your wrong quotations. For, my lord, the holding certainty to consist conſiſt in the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of ideas, is no more a neceſſary cauſe of holding thoſe erroneous propoſitions, which your lordſhip imputes to me, as weakening the credibility of the mentioned articles of faith, than the place of your lordſhip's dwelling is a neceſſary cauſe of wrong quoting.

I ſhall not here go about to trouble your lordſhip, with divining again what may be your lordſhip's preciſe meaning in ſeveral of the propoſitions contained in the paſſages above ſet down; eſpecially that remarkable ambiguous, and to me obſcure one, viz. "there muſt be a "certainty as to ſenſe and tradition." I fear I have waſted too much of your lordſhip's, and my reader's time in that employment already; and there would be no end, if I ſhould endeavour to explain whatever I am at a loſs about the determined ſenſe of, in any of your lordſhip's expreſſions.

Only I will crave leave to beg my readers to obſerve, that in this firſt head, which we are upon, your lordſhip has uſed the terms certain and certainty near twenty times, but without determining in any of them, whether you mean knowledge, or the full aſſurance of faith, or any degree of believing; though it be evident, that in theſe pages your lordſhip uſes certainty for all theſe three: which ambiguous uſe of the main word in that diſcourſe, cannot but render your lordſhip's ſenſe clear and perſpicuous, and your argument very cogent; and no doubt will do ſo to any one, who will be but at the pains to reduce that one word to a clear determined ſenſe all through theſe few paragraphs.

Your lordſhip ſays, "have not all mankind, who have "talked of matters of faith, allowed a certainty of faith, "as well as a certainty of knowledge?" Anſ. But did ever any one of all that mankind allow it as a tolerable way of ſpeaking, that believing in general (for which your lordſhip has uſed it) which contains in it the loweſt degree of faith, ſhould be called certainty? Could he, who ſaid, "I believe, Lord, help my unbelief!" or any one who is weak in faith, or of little faith, be properly ſaid to be certain, or "de dubio certus," of what he believes but with a weak degree of aſſent? I ſhall not queſtion queſtion what your lordſhip's great learning may authorize; but I imagine every one hath not ſkill, or will not aſſume the liberty to ſpeak ſo.

If a witneſs before a judge, aſked upon his oath whether he were certain of ſuch a thing, ſhould anſwer, Yes, he was certain; and, upon farther demand, ſhould give this account of his certainty, that he believed it; would he not make the court and auditors believe ſtrangely of him? For to ſay that a man is certain, when he barely believes, and that perhaps with no great aſſurance of faith, is to ſay that he is certain, where he owns an uncertainty. For he that ſays he barely believes, acknowledges that he aſſents to a propoſition as true, upon bare probability. And where any one aſſents thus to any propoſition, his aſſent excludes not a poſſibility that it may be otherwiſe; and where, in any one's judgment, there is a poſſibility to be otherwiſe, there one cannot deny but there is ſome uncertainty; and the leſs cogent the probabilities appear, upon which he aſſents, the greater the uncertainty. So that all barely probable proofs, which procure aſſent, always containing ſome viſible poſſibility that it may be otherwiſe (or elſe it would be demonſtration) and conſequently the weaker the probability appears, the weaker the aſſent, and the more the uncertainty; it thence follows, that where there is ſuch a mixture of uncertainty, there a man is ſo far uncertain: and therefore to ſay, that a man is certain where he barely believes or aſſents but weakly, though he does believe, ſeems to me to ſay, that he is certain and uncertain together. But though bare belief always includes ſome degrees of uncertainty, yet it does not therefore neceſſarily include any degree of wavering; the evidently ſtrong probability may as ſteadily determine the man to aſſent to the truth, or make him take the propoſition for true, and act accordingly, as knowledge makes them ſee or be certain that it is true. And he that doth ſo, as to truths revealed in the ſcripture, will ſhow his faith by his works; and has, for aught I can ſee, all the faith neceſſary to a chriſtian, and required to ſalvation.

My

My lord, when I conſider the length of my anſwer here, to theſe few pages of your lordſhip's, I cannot but bemoan my own dulneſs, and own my unfitneſs to deal with ſo learned an adverſary, as your lordſhip, in controverſy: for I know not how to anſwer but a propoſition of a determined ſenſe. Whilſt it is vague and uncertain in a general or equivocal uſe of any of the terms, I cannot tell what to ſay to it. I know not but ſuch comprehenſive ways of expreſſing one's ſelf, may do well enough in declamation; but in reaſoning there can be no judgment made, till one can get to ſome poſitive determined ſenſe of the ſpeaker. If your lordſhip had pleaſed to have condeſcended ſo far to my low capacity, as to have delivered your meaning here determined to any one of the ſenſes above ſet down, or any other that you may have in theſe words I gathered them from; it would have ſaved me a great deal of writing, and your lordſhip loſs of time in reading. I ſhould not ſay this here to your lordſhip, were it only in this one place that I find this inconvenience. It is every where in all your lordſhip's reaſonings, that my want of underſtanding cauſes me this difficulty, and againſt my will multiplies the words of my anſwer: for notwithſtanding all that great deal that I have already ſaid to theſe few pages of your lordſhip's; yet my defence is not clear, and ſet in its due light, unleſs I ſhow in particular of every one of thoſe propoſitions (ſome whereof I admit as true, others I deny as not ſo) that it will not prove what is to be proved, viz. that my placing of knowledge in the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of ideas, leſſens the credibility of any article of faith, which it had before.

Your lordſhip having done with the fundamental articles of natural religion, you come in the next place to thoſe of revelation; to inquire, as your lordſhip ſays, "whether thoſe who embrace the articles of faith, in "the way of ideas, can retain their certainty of thoſe "articles, when theſe ideas are quitted." What this inquiry is, I know not very well, becauſe I neither underſtand what it is to embrace articles of faith in the way of ideas, nor know what your lordſhip means by retaining retaining their certainty of those articles, when these ideas are quitted. But it is no strange thing for my short sight, not always distinctly to discern your lordship's meaning: yet here I presume to know that this is the thing to be proved, viz. "that my definition of "knowledge does not leave to the articles of the christian faith the same credibility they had before." The articles your lordship instances in, are,

1. The resurrection of the dead. And here your lordship proceeds just in the same method of arguing, as you did in the former: your lordship brings several passages concerning identity out of my Essay, which you suppose inconsistent with the belief of the resurrection of the same body; and this is your argument to prove, that my defining of knowledge to consist in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of ideas, "alters "the foundation of this article of faith, and leaves it "not the same credibility it had before." Now, my lord, granting all that your lordship has here quoted out of my chapter of identity and diversity, to be as false as your lordship pleases, and as inconsistent as your lordship would have it, with the article of the resurrection from the dead; nay, granting all the rest of my whole Essay to be false; how will it follow from thence, that the placing certainty in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of ideas, weakens the credibility of this article of faith, that "the dead shall rise?" Let it be, that I who place certainty in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of ideas am guilty of errours, that weaken the credibility of this article of faith; others who place certainty in the same perception, may not run into those errours, and so not have their belief of this article at all shaken.

Your lordship therefore, by all the long discourse you have made here against my notion of personal identity, to prove that it weakens the credibility of the resurrection of the dead, should you have proved it ever so clearly, has not, I humbly conceive, said therein any one word towards the proving, that my definition of knowledge weakens the credibility of this article of faith. For this, my lord, is the proposition to be proved, as your your lordſhip cannot but remember, if you pleaſe to recollect what is ſaid in your 21ſt and following pages, and what, in the 95th page of my ſecond letter, quoted by your lordſhip, it was deſigned as an anſwer to. And ſo I proceed to the next articles of faith your lordſhip inſtances in. Your lordſhip ſays,

2. "The next articles of faith which my notion of "ideas is inconſiſtent with, are no leſs than thoſe of "the Trinity, and the incarnation of our Saviour." Where I muſt humbly crave leave to obſerve to your lordſhip, that in this ſecond head here, your lordſhip has changed the queſtion from my notions of certainty to my notion of ideas. For the queſtion, as I have often had occaſion to obſerve to your lordſhip, is, whether my notion of certainty, i. e. my placing of certainty in the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of ideas, alters the foundation, and leſſens the credibility of any article of faith? This being the queſtion between your lordſhip and me, ought, I humbly conceive, moſt eſpecially to have been kept cloſe to in this article of the Trinity; becauſe it was upon the account of my notion of certainty, as prejudicial to the doctrine of the Trinity, that my book was firſt brought into this diſpute. But your lordſhip offers nothing, that I can find, to prove that my definition of knowledge or certainty does any way leſſen the credibility of either of the articles here mentioned, unleſs your inſiſting upon ſome ſuppoſed errours of mine about nature and perſon, muſt be taken for proofs of this propoſition, that my definition of certainty leſſens the credibility of the articles of the Trinity, and our Saviour's incarnation. And then the anſwer I have already given to the ſame way of argumentation uſed by your lordſhip, concerning the articles of a God, revelation, and the reſurrection, I think may ſuffice.

Having, as I beg leave to think, ſhown that your lordſhip has not in the leaſt proved this propoſition, that the placing of certainty in the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of ideas, weakens the credibility of any one article of faith, which was your former accuſation againſt this (as your lordſhip is pleaſed to call it) "new method of certainty, of ſo dangerous conſequence

"to

" to that article of faith which your lordship has endea" voured to defend;" and all that your terrible representation of it being, as I humbly conceive, come to just nothing: I come now to vindicate my book from your new accusation in your last letter, and to show that you no more prove the passages you allege out of my Essay to have any inconsistency with the articles of the christian faith you oppose them to, than you have proved by them, that my definition of knowledge weakens the credibility of any of those articles.

1. The article of the christian faith your lordship begins with, is that of the resurrection of the dead; and concerning that, you say, " the reason of believing the " resurrection of the same body, upon my grounds, is
" from the idea of identity." Answ. Give me leave, my lord, to say that the reason of believing any article of the christian faith (such as your lordship is here speaking of) to me and upon my grounds, is its being a part of divine revelation. Upon this ground I believed it, before I either writ that chapter of identity and diversity, and before I ever thought of those propositions which your lordship quotes out of that chapter, and upon the same ground I believe it still; and not from my idea of identity. This saying of your lordship's therefore, being a proposition neither self-evident, nor allowed by me to be true, remains to be proved. So that your foundation failing, all your large superstructure built thereupon comes to nothing.

But, my lord, before we go any farther, I crave leave humbly to represent to your lordship, that I thought you undertook to make out that my notion of ideas was inconsistent with the articles of the christian faith. But that which your lordship instances in here, is not, that I yet know, any article of the christian faith. The resurrection of the dead, I acknowledge to be an article of the christian faith: but that the resurrection of the same body, in your lordship's sense of the same body, is an article of the christian faith, is what, I confess, I do not yet know.

In the New Testament (wherein, I think, are contained all the articles of the christian faith) I find our Saviour

Saviour and the apoſtles to preach the reſurrection of the dead, and the reſurrection from the dead, in many places: but I do not remember any place, where the reſurrection of the ſame body is ſo much as mentioned. Nay, which is very remarkable in the caſe, I do not remember in any place of the New Teſtament (where the general reſurrection at the laſt day is ſpoken of) any ſuch expreſſion as the reſurrection of the body, much leſs of the ſame body. And it may ſeem to be, not without ſome ſpecial reaſon, that where St. Paul's diſcourſe was particularly concerning the body, and ſo led him to name it; yet when he ſpeaks of the reſurrection, he ſays, you, and not your bodies. 1 Cor. vi. 14.

I ſay, the general reſurrection at the laſt day; becauſe where the reſurrection of ſome particular perſons, preſently upon our Saviour's reſurrection, is mentioned, the words are, "The graves were opened, "and many bodies of ſaints, which ſlept, "aroſe and came out of the graves after "his reſurrection, and went into the holy city, and "appeared to many." Of which peculiar way of ſpeaking of this reſurrection, the paſſage itſelf gives a reaſon in theſe words, "appeared to many;" i. e. thoſe who ſlept, appeared, ſo as to be known to be riſen. But this could not be known, unleſs they brought with them the evidence, that they were thoſe who had been dead, whereof there were theſe two proofs; their graves were opened, and their bodies not only gone out of them, but appeared to be the ſame to thoſe who had known them formerly alive, and knew them to be dead and buried. For if they had been thoſe who had been dead ſo long, that all who knew them once alive were now gone, thoſe to whom they appeared might have known them to be men, but could not have known they were riſen from the dead, becauſe they never knew they had been dead. All that by their appearing they could have known, was, that they were ſo many living ſtrangers, of whoſe reſurrection they knew nothing. It was neceſſary therefore, that they ſhould come in ſuch bodies, as might in make and ſize, &c. appear to be the ſame they had before, that they might be known to thoſe of their acquaintance ſince whom they appeared to. And it is probable they were ſuch as were newly dead, whoſe bodies were not diſſolved and diſſipated; and therefore it is particularly ſaid here (differently from what is ſaid of the general reſurrection) that their bodies aroſe: becauſe they were the ſame that were then lying in their graves, the moment before they roſe.

Matth. xxvii. 52, 53.

But your lordſhip endeavours to prove it muſt be the ſame body: and let us grant, that your lordſhip, nay, and others too, think you have proved it muſt be the ſame body; will you therefore ſay, that he holds what is inconſiſtent with an article of faith, who having never ſeen this your lordſhip's interpretation of the ſcripture, nor your reaſons for the ſame body, in your ſenſe of ſame body; or, if he has ſeen them, yet not underſtanding them, or not perceiving the force of them; believes what the ſcripture propoſes to him, viz. that at the laſt day "the dead ſhall be raiſed," without determining whether it ſhould be with the very ſame bodies or no?

I know your lordſhip pretends not to erect your particular interpretations of ſcripture into articles of faith; and if you do not, he that believes "the dead ſhall be "raiſed," believes that article of faith which the ſcripture propoſes; and cannot be accuſed of holding any thing inconſiſtent with it, if it ſhould happen, that what he holds is inconſiſtent with another propoſition, viz. "that the dead ſhall be raiſed with the ſame bodies," in your lordſhip's ſenſe; which I do not find propoſed in holy writ as an article of faith.

But your lordſhip argues, "it muſt be the ſame body;" which, as you explain ſame body, "is not the ſame in-"dividual particles of matter, which were united at the "point of death; nor the ſame particles of matter, that "the ſinner had at the time of the commiſſion of his "ſins. But that it muſt be the ſame material ſubſtance, "which was vitally united to the ſoul here;" i. e. as I underſtand it, the ſame individual particles of matter, which were, ſome time during his life here, vitally united to the ſoul.

Your firſt argument, to prove that it muſt be the ſame body in this ſenſe of the ſame body, is taken from theſe words of our Saviour: " All that are

John v. 28, 29. " in the graves ſhall hear his voice, and " ſhall come forth." From whence your lordſhip argues, that theſe words, " all that are in " the graves," relate to no other ſubſtance, than what was united to the ſoul in life; becauſe " a different " ſubſtance cannot be ſaid to be in the graves, and " to come out of them." Which words of your lordſhip's, if they prove any thing, prove that the ſoul too is lodged in the grave, and raiſed out of it at the laſt day. For your lordſhip ſays, " can a different ſub- " ſtance be ſaid to be in their graves, and come out of " them?" So that according to this interpretation of theſe words of our Saviour, no other ſubſtance being raiſed, but what hears his voice; and no other ſubſtance hearing his voice, but what being called comes out of the grave; and no other ſubſtance coming out of the grave, but what was in the grave, any one muſt conclude, that the ſoul, unleſs it be in the grave, will make no part of the perſon that is raiſed, unleſs, as your lordſhip argues againſt me, " you can make it out, that a " ſubſtance which never was in the grave may come out " of it," or that the ſoul is no ſubſtance.

But ſetting aſide the ſubſtance of the ſoul, another thing that will make any one doubt, whether this your interpretation of our Saviour's words be neceſſarily to be received as their true ſenſe, is, that it will not be very eaſily reconciled to your ſaying, you do not mean by the ſame body " the ſame individual particles which were " united at the point of death." And yet by this interpretation of our Saviour's words, you can mean no other particles but ſuch as were united at the point of death: becauſe you mean no other ſubſtance, but what comes out of the grave; and no ſubſtance, no particles come out, you ſay, but what were in the grave: and I think your lordſhip will not ſay, that the particles that were ſeparate from the body by perſpiration, before the point of death, were laid up in the grave.

But your lordſhip, I find, has an anſwer to this; viz. " that by comparing this with other places, you find " that the words [of our Saviour above quoted] are to " be

" be understood of the substance of the body, to which " the soul was united; and not to (I suppose your lord- " ship writ of) those individual particles," i. e. those individual particles that are in the grave at the resurrection: for so they must be read, to make your lordship's sense entire, and to have the purpose of your answer here. And then methinks this last sense of our Saviour's words given by your lordship, wholly overturns the sense which you have given of them above; where from those words you press the belief of the resurrection of the same body, by this strong argument, that a substance could not, upon hearing the voice of Christ, " come out of the grave, which was never in the grave." There (as far as I can understand your words) your lordship argues, that our Saviour's words must be understood of the particles in the grave, " unless, as your " lordship says, one can make it out that a substance " which was never in the grave, may come out of it." And here your lordship expressly says, " that our Savi- " our's words are to be understood of the substance of " that body, to which the soul was [at any time] unit- " ed, and not to those individual particles that are in " the grave." Which put together, seems to me to say, that our Saviour's words are to be understood of those particles only that are in the grave, and not of those particles only which are in the grave, but of others also which have at any time been vitally united to the soul, but never were in the grave.

The next text your lordship brings, to make the resurrection of the same body, in your sense, an article of faith, are these words of St. Paul: " For we " must all appear before the judgment-seat " of Christ, that every one may receive the things done " in his body, according to that he hath done, whether " it be good or bad." To which your lordship subjoins this question; " Can these words be understood of " any other material substance, but that body in which " these things were done?" Answ. A man may suspend his determining the meaning of the apostle to be, that a sinner shall suffer for his sins in the very same body wherein he committed them; because St. Paul does not 2 Cor. v. 10.

ſay he ſhall have the very ſame body when he ſuffers, that he had when he ſinned. The apoſtle ſays indeed, "done in his body." The body he had, and did things in at five or fifteen, was no doubt his body, as much as that which he did things in at fifty was his body, though his body were not the very ſame body at thoſe different ages: and ſo will the body, which he ſhall have after the reſurrection, be his body, though it be not the very ſame with that which he had at five, or fifteen, or fifty. He that at threeſcore is broke on the wheel, for a murder he committed at twenty, is puniſhed for what he did in his body; though the body he has, i. e. his body at threeſcore, be not the ſame, i. e. made up of the ſame individual particles of matter, that that body was, which he had forty years before. When your lordſhip has reſolved with yourſelf, what that ſame immutable he is, which at the laſt judgment ſhall receive the things done in his body; your lordſhip will eaſily ſee, that the body he had, when an embryo in the womb, when a child playing in coats, when a man marrying a wife, and when bed-rid dying of a conſumption, and at laſt, which he ſhall have after his reſurrection; are each of them his body, though neither of them be the ſame body, the one with the other.

But farther to your lordſhip's queſtion, "can theſe "words be underſtood of any other material ſubſtance, "but that body in which theſe things were done?" I anſwer, theſe words of St. Paul may be underſtood of another material ſubſtance, than that body in which theſe things were done; becauſe your lordſhip teaches me, and gives me a ſtrong reaſon ſo to underſtand them. Your lordſhip ſays, that "you do not ſay the ſame par-"ticles of matter, which the ſinner had at the very "time of the commiſſion of his ſins, ſhall be raiſed at "the laſt day." And your lordſhip gives this reaſon for it: "for then a long ſinner muſt have a vaſt body, "conſidering the continual ſpending of particles by "perſpiration." Now, my lord, if the apoſtle's words, as your lordſhip would argue, cannot be underſtood of any other material ſubſtance, but that body in which theſe things were done; and nobody, upon the removal or change of some of the particles that at any time make it up, is the same material substance, or the same body: it will, I think, thence follow, that either the sinner must have all the same individual particles vitally united to his soul, when he is raised, that he had vitally united to his soul, when he sinned: or else St. Paul's words here cannot be understood to mean the same body in which "the things were done." For if there were other particles of matter in the body, wherein the thing was done, than in that which is raised, that which is raised cannot be the same body in which they were done: unless that alone, which has just all the same individual particles when any action is done, being the same body wherein it was done, that also, which has not the same individual particles wherein that action was done, can be the same body wherein it was done; which is in effect to make the same body sometimes to be the same, and sometimes not the same.

Your lordship thinks it suffices to make the same body to have not all, but no other particles of matter, but such as were sometime or other vitally united to the soul before: but such a body, made up of part of the particles sometime or other vitally united to the soul, is no more the same body wherein the actions were done in the distant parts of the long sinner's life, than that is the same body in which a quarter, or half, or three quarters, of the same particles, that made it up, are wanting. For example; a sinner has acted here in his body an hundred years; he is raised at the last day, but with what body? The same, says your lordship, that he acted in; because St. Paul says "he must receive the "things done in his body." What therefore must his body at the resurrection consist of? Must it consist of all the particles of matter that have ever been vitally united to his soul? for they, in succession, have all of them made up his body, wherein he did these things. No, says your lordship, that would make his body too vast; it suffices to make the same body in which the things were done, that it consists of some of the particles, and no other but such as were sometime, during his life, vitally united to his soul. But according to this account, his body at the reſurrection being, as your lordſhip ſeems to limit it, near the ſame ſize it was in ſome part of his life; it will be no more the ſame body, in which the things were done in the diſtant parts of his life, than that is the ſame body, in which half, or three quarters, or more of the individual matter, that then made it up, is now wanting. For example, let his body, at fifty years old, conſiſt of a million of parts; five hundred thouſand at leaſt of thoſe parts will be different from thoſe which made up his body at ten years, and at an hundred. So that to take the numerical particles that made up his body at fifty, or any other ſeaſon of his life; or to gather them promiſcuouſly out of thoſe which at different times have ſucceſſively been vitally united to his ſoul; they will no more make the ſame body, which was his, wherein ſome of his actions were done, than that is the ſame body, which has but half the ſame particles: and yet all your lordſhip's argument here for the ſame body, is, becauſe St. Paul ſays it muſt be his body, in which theſe things were done; which it could not be, "if any other ſubſtance were joined to "it," i. e. if any other particles of matter made up the body, which were not vitally united to the ſoul, when the action was done.

Again, your lordſhip ſays, "that you do not ſay the "ſame individual particles [ſhall make up the body at "the reſurrection] which were united at the point of "death; for there muſt be a great alteration in them, "in a lingering diſeaſe, as, if a fat man falls into a con-"ſumption." Becauſe it is likely your lordſhip thinks theſe particles of a decrepit, waſted, withered body would be too few, or unfit to make ſuch a plump, ſtrong, vigorous, well-ſized body, as it has pleaſed your lordſhip to proportion out in your thoughts to men at the reſurrection; and therefore ſome ſmall portion of the particles formerly united vitally to that man's ſoul, ſhall be re-aſſumed to make up his body to the bulk your lordſhip judges convenient: but the greateſt part of them ſhall be left out, to avoid the making his body more vaſt than your lordſhip thinks will be fit, as appears by theſe your lordſhip's words immediately following, lowing, viz. " that you do not ſay the ſame particles " the ſinner had at the very time of commiſſion of his " ſins, for then a long ſinner muſt have a vaſt body."

But then pray, my lord, what muſt an embryo do, who, dying within a few hours after his body was vitally united to his ſoul, has no particles of matter, which were formerly vitally united to it, to make up his body of that ſize and proportion which your lordſhip ſeems to require in bodies at the reſurrection? or muſt we believe he ſhall remain content with that ſmall pittance of matter, and that yet imperfect body to eternity; becauſe it is an article of faith to believe the reſurrection of the very ſame body? i. e. made up of only ſuch particles as have been vitally united to the ſoul. For if it be ſo, as your lordſhip ſays, " that life is the reſult of the union " of ſoul and body," it will follow, that the body of an embryo, dying in the womb, may be very little, not the thouſandth part of an ordinary man. For ſince from the firſt conception and beginning of formation, it has life, and " life is the reſult of the union of the ſoul with the " body;" an embryo, that ſhall die either by the untimely death of the mother, or by any other accident preſently after it has life, muſt, according to your lordſhip's doctrine, remain a man not an inch long to eternity; becauſe there are not particles of matter, formerly united to his ſoul, to make him bigger; and no other can be made uſe of to that purpoſe: though what greater congruity the ſoul hath with any particles of matter, which were once vitally united to it, but are now ſo no longer, than it hath with particles of matter, which it was never united to; would be hard to determine, if that ſhould be demanded.

By theſe, and not a few other the like conſequences, one may ſee what ſervice they do to religion and the chriſtian doctrine, who raiſe queſtions, and make articles of faith about the reſurrection of the ſame body, where the ſcripture ſays nothing of the ſame body; or if it does, it is with no ſmall reprimand to thoſe who make ſuch an inquiry. " But ſome man " will ſay, how are the dead raiſed up? and " with what body do they come? Thou " fool,

1 Cor. xv. 35, &c.

" fool, that which thou ſoweſt is not quickened except " it die. And that which thou ſoweſt, thou ſoweſt not " that body that ſhall be, but bare grain; it may chance " of wheat or ſome other grain: but God giveth it a " body as it hath pleaſed him." Words, I ſhould think, ſufficient to deter us from determining any thing for or againſt the ſame body being raiſed at the laſt day. It ſuffices, that all the dead ſhall be raiſed, and every one appear and anſwer for the things done in this life, and receive according to the things he hath done in his body, whether good or bad. He that believes this, and has ſaid nothing inconſiſtent herewith, I preſume may, and muſt be acquitted from being guilty of any thing inconſiſtent with the article of the reſurrection of the dead.

But your lordſhip, to prove the reſurrection of the ſame body to be an article of faith, farther aſks, " how " could it be ſaid, if any other ſubſtance be joined to " the ſoul at the reſurrection, as its body, that they were " the things done in or by the body?" Anſw. Juſt as it may be ſaid of a man at an hundred years old, that hath then another ſubſtance joined to his ſoul, than he had at twenty, that the murder or drunkenneſs he was guilty of at twenty, were things done in the body: how, " by the body" comes in here, I do not ſee.

Your lordſhip adds, " and St. Paul's diſpute about " the manner of raiſing the body might ſoon have ended, " if there was no neceſſity of the ſame body." Anſw. When I underſtand what argument there is in theſe words to prove the reſurrection of the ſame body, without the mixture of one new atom of matter, I ſhall know what to ſay to it. In the mean time this I underſtand, that St. Paul would have put as ſhort an end to all diſputes about this matter, if he had ſaid, that there was a neceſſity of the ſame body, or that it ſhould be the ſame body.

The next text of ſcripture you bring for the ſame body, is, " if there be no reſurrection of the " dead, then is not Chriſt raiſed." From which your lordſhip argues, " it ſeems then " other bodies are to be raiſed as his was." I grant other dead, as certainly raiſed as Chriſt was; for elſe his his reſurrection would be of no uſe to mankind. But I do not ſee how it follows that they ſhall be raiſed with the ſame body, as your lordſhip infers in theſe words annexed; "and can there be any doubt, whether "his body was the ſame material ſubſtance which was "united to his ſoul before?" I anſwer, none at all; nor that it had juſt the ſame diſtinguiſhable lineaments and marks, yea, and the ſame wounds that it had at the time of his death. If therefore your lordſhip will argue from other bodies being raiſed as his was, that they muſt keep proportion with his in fameneſs; then we muſt believe, that every man ſhall be raiſed with the ſame lineaments and other notes of diſtinction he had at the time of his death, even with his wounds yet open, if he had any, becauſe our Saviour was ſo raiſed; which ſeems to me ſcarce reconcileable with what your lordſhip ſays of a fat man falling into a conſumption, and dying.

2 Cor. xv. 16.

But whether it will conſiſt or no with your lordſhip's meaning in that place, this to me ſeems a conſequence that will need to be better proved, viz. that our bodies muſt be raiſed the ſame, juſt as our Saviour's was? becauſe St. Paul ſays, "if there be no reſurrection of the "dead, then is not Chriſt riſen." For it may be a good conſequence, Chriſt is riſen, and therefore there ſhall be a reſurrection of the dead; and yet this may not be a good conſequence, Chriſt was raiſed with the ſame body he had at his death, therefore all men ſhall be raiſed with the ſame body they had at their death, contrary to what your lordſhip ſays concerning a fat man dying of a conſumption. But the caſe I think far different betwixt our Saviour, and thoſe to be raiſed at the laſt day.

1. His body ſaw not corruption, and therefore to give him another body, new moulded, mixed with other particles, which were not contained in it as it lay in the grave, whole and entire as it was laid there, had been to deſtroy his body to frame him a new one without any need. But why with the remaining particles of a man's body long ſince diſſolved and mouldered into duſt and atoms (whereof poſſibly a great part may have undergone gone variety of changes, and entered into other concretions even in the bodies of other men) other new particles of matter mixed with them, may not ſerve to make his body again, as well as the mixture of new and different particles of matter with the old, did in the compaſs of his life make his body; I think no reaſon can be given.

This may ſerve to ſhow, why, though the materials of our Saviour's body were not changed at his reſurrection; yet it does not follow, but that the body of a man, dead and rotten in his grave, or burnt, may at the laſt day have ſeveral new particles in it, and that without any inconvenience. Since whatever matter is vitally united to his ſoul, is his body, as much as is that, which was united to it when he was born, or in any other part of his life.

2. In the next place, the ſize, ſhape, figure, and lineaments of our Saviour's body, even to his wounds, into which doubting Thomas put his fingers and hand, were to be kept in the raiſed body of our Saviour, the ſame they were at his death, to be a conviction to his diſciples, to whom he ſhowed himſelf, and who were to be witneſſes of his reſurrection, that their maſter, the very ſame man, was crucified, dead and buried, and raiſed again; and therefore he was handled by them, and eat before them after he was riſen, to give them in all points full ſatisfaction that it was really he, the ſame, and not another, nor a ſpectre or apparition of him: though I do not think your lordſhip will thence argue, that becauſe others are to be raiſed as he was, therefore it is neceſſary to believe, that becauſe he eat after his reſurrection, others at the laſt day ſhall eat and drink after they are raiſed from the dead; which ſeems to me as good an argument, as becauſe his undiſſolved body was raiſed out of the grave, juſt as it there lay entire, without the mixture of any new particles, therefore the corrupted and conſumed bodies of the dead at the reſurrection ſhall be new-framed only out of thoſe ſcattered particles, which were once vitally united to their ſouls, without the leaſt mixture of any one ſingle atom of new matter. But at the laſt day, when all men are raiſed, there there will be no need to be aſſured of any one particular man's reſurrection. It is enough that every one ſhall appear before the judgment-ſeat of Chriſt, to receive according to what he had done in his former life; but in what ſort of body he ſhall appear, or of what particles made up, the ſcripture having ſaid nothing, but that it ſhall be a ſpiritual body raiſed in incorruption, it is not for me to determine.

Your lordſhip aſks, "were they [who ſaw our Saviour "after his reſurrection] witneſſes only of ſome material "ſubſtance, then united to his ſoul?" In anſwer, I beg your lordſhip to conſider, whether you ſuppoſe our Saviour was to be known to be the ſame man (to the witneſſes that were to ſee him, and teſtify his reſurrection) by his ſoul, that could neither be ſeen, nor known to be the ſame; or by his body, that could be ſeen, and, by the diſcernible ſtructure and marks of it, be known to be the ſame? When your lordſhip has reſolved that, all that you ſay in that page will anſwer itſelf. But becauſe one man cannot know another to be the ſame, but by the outward viſible lineaments, and ſenſible marks he has been wont to be known and diſtinguiſhed by; will your lordſhip therefore argue, that the great judge at the laſt day, who gives to each man, whom he raiſes, his new body, ſhall not be able to know who is who, unleſs he give to every one of them a body, juſt of the ſame figure, ſize, and features, and made up of the very ſame individual particles he had in his former life? Whether ſuch a way of arguing for the reſurrection of the ſame body to be an article of faith, contributes much to the ſtrengthening the credibility of the article of the reſurrection of the dead, I ſhall leave to the judgment of others.

Farther, for the proving the reſurrection of the ſame body to be an article of faith, your lordſhip ſays: "but "the apoſtle inſiſts upon the reſurrection of Chriſt, not "merely as an argument of the poſſibility of ours, but "of the certainty of it; becauſe he roſe, as the firſt-"fruits; Chriſt the firſt-fruits, afterwards "they that are Chriſt's at his coming." 1 Cor. xv. 20, 23.

Anſw. No doubt the reſurrection of Chriſt

is

is a proof of the certainty of our reſurrection. But is it therefore a proof of the reſurrection of the ſame body, conſiſting of the ſame individual particles which concurred to the making up of our body here, without the mixture of any one other particle of matter? I confeſs I ſee no ſuch conſequence.

But your lordſhip goes on: "St. Paul was aware of "the objections in men's minds, about the reſurrection "of the ſame body; and it is of great conſequence, as "to this article, to ſhow upon what grounds he pro-"ceeds. But ſome men will ſay, how are the dead "raiſed up, and with what body do they come? Firſt, "he ſhows, that the ſeminal parts of plants are won-"derfully improved by the ordinary providence of God, "in the manner of their vegetation." Anſw. I do not perfectly underſtand what it is "for the ſeminal parts "of plants to be wonderfully improved by the ordinary "providence of God, in the manner of their vegeta-"tion;" or elſe perhaps I ſhould better ſee how this here tends to the proof of the reſurrection of the ſame body, in your lordſhip's ſenſe.

It continues, "they ſow bare grain of wheat, or of "ſome other grain, but God giveth it a body, as it hath "pleaſed him, and to every ſeed his own body. Here, "ſays your lordſhip, is an identity of the material ſub-"ſtance ſuppoſed." It may be ſo. But to me a diver-ſity of the material ſubſtance, i. e. of the component particles, is here ſuppoſed, or in direct words ſaid. For the words of St. Paul, taken all together, run thus,

Ver. 37. "that which thou ſoweſt, thou ſoweſt not "that body which ſhall be, but bare grain:"

and ſo on, as your lordſhip has ſet down the remainder of them. From which words of St. Paul, the natural argument ſeems to me to ſtand thus: if the body that is put in the earth in ſowing, is not that body which ſhall be, then the body that is put in the grave, is not that, i. e. the ſame, body that ſhall be.

But your lordſhip proves it to be the ſame body, by theſe three Greek words of the text, τὸ ἴδιον σῶμα, which your lordſhip interprets thus, "that proper body which "belongs to it." Anſw. Indeed by thoſe Greek words, τὸ ἴδιον σῶμα, whether our translators have rightly rendered them "his own body," or your lordship more rightly "that proper body which belongs to it," I formerly understood no more but this, that in the production of wheat and other grain from seed, God continued every species distinct; so that from grains of wheat sown, root, stalk, blade, ear, and grains, of wheat, were produced, and not those of barley; and so of the rest: which I took to be the meaning of "to every seed "his own body." No, says your lordship, these words prove, that to every plant of wheat, and to every grain of wheat produced in it, is given the proper body that belongs to it, which is the same body with the grain that was sown. Answ. This I confess I do not understand; because I do not understand how one individual grain can be the same with twenty, fifty, or an hundred individual grains, for such sometimes is the increase.

τῷ

But your lordship proves it. For, says your lordship, "every seed having that body in little, which is afterwards so much enlarged, and in grain the seed is corrupted before its germination; but it hath its proper "organical parts, which makes it the same body with "that which it grows up to. For although grain be "not divided into lobes as other seeds are, yet it hath "been found, by the most accurate observations, that "upon separating the membranes these seminal parts "are discerned in them, which afterwards grow up to "that body which we call corn." In which words I crave leave to observe, that your lordship supposes, that a body may be enlarged by the addition of a hundred or a thousand times as much in bulk as its own matter, and yet continue the same body; which, I confess, I cannot understand.

But in the next place, if that could be so, and that the plant in its full growth at harvest, increased by a thousand or a million of times as much new matter added to it as it had, when it lay in little concealed in the grain that was sown, was the very same body; yet I do not think that your lordship will say, that every minute, insensible, and inconceivably small grain of the hundred grains, contained in that little organized seminal plant, plant, is every one of them the very same with that grain which contains that whole little seminal plant, and all those invisible grains in it: for then it will follow, that one grain is the same with an hundred, and an hundred distinct grains the same with one; which I shall be able to assent to, when I can conceive that all the wheat in the world is but one grain.

For, I beseech you, my lord, consider what it is St. Paul here speaks of! It is plain he speaks of that which is sown and dies; i. e. the grain that the husbandman takes out of his barn to sow in his field. And of this grain St. Paul says, "that it is not that body "that shall be." These two, viz. "that which is sown, "and that body that shall be," are all the bodies that St. Paul here speaks of, to represent the agreement or difference of men's bodies after the resurrection, with those they had before they died. Now I crave leave to ask your lordship, which of these two is that little invisible seminal plant, which your lordship here speaks of? Does your lordship mean by it the grain that is sown? But that is not what St. Paul speaks of, he could not mean this embryonated little plant, for he could not denote it by these words, "that which thou sowest," for that he says must die; but this little embryonated plant, contained in the seed that is sown, dies not: or does your lordship mean by it "the body that shall be?" But neither by these words, "the body that shall be," can St. Paul be supposed to denote this insensible little embryonated plant; for that is already in being, contained in the seed that is sown, and therefore could not be spoken of under the name of the body that shall be. And therefore, I confess, I cannot see of what use it is to your lordship to introduce here this third body, which St. Paul mentions not; and to make that the same or not the same with any other, when those which St. Paul speaks of, are, as I humbly conceive, these two visible sensible bodies, the grain sown, and the corn grown up to ear; with neither of which this insensible embryonated plant can be the same body, unless an insensible body can be the same body with a sensible body, and a little body can be the same body with one ten thousand, or an hundred hundred thouſand times as big as itſelf. So that yet, I confeſs, I ſee not the reſurrection of the ſame body proved from theſe words of St. Paul to be an article of faith.

Your lordſhip goes on: "St. Paul indeed ſaith, that "we ſow not that body that ſhall be; but he ſpeaks not "of the identity but the perfection of it." Here my underſtanding fails me again: for I cannot underſtand St. Paul to ſay, that the ſame identical ſenſible grain of wheat, which was ſown at ſeed-time, is the very ſame with every grain of wheat in the ear at harveſt, that ſprang from it: yet ſo I muſt underſtand it, to make it prove that the ſame ſenſible body, that is laid in the grave, ſhall be the very ſame with that which ſhall be raiſed at the reſurrection. For I do not know of any ſeminal body in little, contained in the dead carcaſe of any man or woman; which, as your lordſhip ſays, in ſeeds, having its proper organical parts, ſhall afterwards be enlarged, and at the reſurrection grow up into the ſame man. For I never thought of any ſeed or ſeminal parts, either of plant or animal, "ſo wonderfully im- "proved by the providence of God," whereby the ſame plant or animal ſhould beget itſelf; nor ever heard, that it was by divine providence deſigned to produce the ſame individual, but for the producing of future and diſtinct individuals, for the continuation of the ſame ſpecies.

Your lordſhip's next words are, "and although there "be ſuch a difference from the grain itſelf, when it "comes up to be perfect corn, with root, ſtalk, blade, "and ear, that it may be ſaid to outward appearance "not to be the ſame body; yet, with regard to the "ſeminal and organical parts, it is as much the ſame, "as the man grown up is the ſame with the embryo in "the womb." Anſw. It does not appear, by any thing I can find in the text, that St. Paul here compared the body produced with the ſeminal and organical parts contained in the grain it ſprang from, but with the whole ſenſible grain that was ſown. Microſcopes had not then diſcovered the little embryo plant in the ſeed; and ſuppoſing it ſhould have been revealed to St. Paul (though (though in the ſcripture we find little revelation of natural philoſophy) yet an argument taken from a thing perfectly unknown to the Corinthians, whom he writ to, could be of no manner of uſe to them, nor ſerve at all either to inſtruct or convince them. But granting that thoſe St. Paul writ to, knew as well as Mr. Lewenhocke; yet your lordſhip thereby proves not the raiſing of the ſame body: your lordſhip ſays it is as much the ſame [I crave leave to add body] "as a man grown up "is the ſame" (ſame what, I beſeech your lordſhip?) "with the embryo in the womb." For that the body of the embryo in the womb, and the body of the man grown up, is the ſame body, I think no one will ſay; unleſs he can perſuade himſelf that a body, that is not a hundredth part of another, is the ſame with that other; which I think no one will do, till, having renounced this dangerous way by ideas of thinking and reaſoning, he has learnt to ſay that a part and the whole are the ſame.

Your lordſhip goes on: "and although many arguments may be uſed to prove, that a man is not the "ſame, becauſe life, which depends upon the courſe of "the blood, and the manner of reſpiration and nutrition, is ſo different in both ſtates; yet that man would "be thought ridiculous, that ſhould ſeriouſly affirm that "it was not the ſame man. And your lordſhip ſays, I "grant, that the variation of great parcels of matter in "plants alters not the identity; and that the organization of the parts in one coherent body, partaking of "one common life, makes the identity of a plant." Anſw. My lord, I think the queſtion is not about the ſame man, but the ſame body: for though I do ſay, (ſomewhat differently from what your lordſhip ſets down as my words here) "that which has "ſuch an organization, as is fit to receive "and diſtribute nouriſhment, ſo as to continue and frame the wood, bark, and leaves, &c. of a "plant, in which conſiſts the vegetable life; continues "to be the ſame plant, as long as it partakes of the "ſame life, though that life be communicated to new "particles of matter, vitally united to the living plant:"

Eſſay, b. ii. c. 27. § 4.

yet

yet I do not remember that I any where ſay, that a plant, which was once no bigger than an oaten-ſtraw, and afterwards grows to be above a fathom about, is the ſame body, though it be ſtill the ſame plant.

The well known tree in Epping-foreſt, called the king's-oak, which from not weighing an ounce at firſt, grew to have many tuns of timber in it, was all along the ſame oak, the very ſame plant; but nobody, I think, will ſay it was the ſame body when it weighed a tun, as it was when it weighed but an ounce; unleſs he has a mind to ſignalize himſelf by ſaying, that that is the ſame body, which has a thouſand particles of different matter in it, for one particle that is the ſame: which is no better than to ſay, that a thouſand different particles are but one and the ſame particle, and one and the ſame particle is a thouſand different particles; a thouſand times greater abſurdity, than to ſay half is the whole, or the whole is the ſame with the half. Which will be improved ten times yet farther, if a man ſhall ſay (as your lordſhip ſeems to me to argue here) that that great oak is the very ſame body with the acorn it ſprang from, becauſe there was in that acorn an oak in little, which was afterwards (as your lordſhip expreſſes it) ſo much enlarged as to make that mighty tree: for this embryo, if I may ſo call it, or oak in little, being not the hundredth, or perhaps the thouſandth part of the acorn, and the acorn being not the thouſandth part of the grown oak; it will be very extraordinary to prove the acorn and the grown oak to be the ſame body, by a way wherein it cannot be pretended, that above one particle of an hundred thouſand or a million, is the ſame in the one body that it was in the other. From which way of reaſoning, it will follow, that a nurſe and her ſucking child have the ſame body; and be paſt doubt, that a mother and her infant have the ſame body. But this is a way of certainty found out to eſtabliſh the articles of faith, and to overturn the new method of certainty that your lordſhip ſays "I have ſtarted, which is apt to leave "men's minds more doubtful than before."

And now I deſire your lordſhip to conſider of what uſe it is to you in the preſent caſe to quote out of my

Eſſay theſe words, "that partaking of one common "life makes the identity of the plant;" ſince the queſtion is not about the identity of a plant, but about the identity of a body; it being a very different thing to be the ſame plant, and to be the ſame body: for that which makes the ſame plant, does not make the ſame body; the one being the partaking in the ſame continued vegetable life, the other the conſiſting of the ſame numerical particles of matter. And therefore your lordſhip's inference from my words above-quoted, in theſe which you ſubjoin, ſeems to me a very ſtrange one, viz. "ſo "that in things capable of any ſort of life, the identity "is conſiſtent with a continued ſucceſſion of parts; and "ſo the wheat grown up is the ſame body with the "grain that was ſown:" for, I believe, if my words, from which you infer, "and ſo the wheat grown up is "the ſame body with the grain that was ſown," were put into a ſyllogiſm, this would hardly be brought to be the concluſion.

But your lordſhip goes on with conſequence upon conſequence, though I have not eyes acute enough every where to ſee the connexion, till you bring it to the reſurrection of the ſame body. The connexion of your lordſhip's words is as followeth: "and thus the altera-"tion of the parts of the body, at the reſurrection, is "conſiſtent with its identity, if its organization and "life be the ſame; and this is a real identity of the "body, which depends not upon conſciouſneſs. From "whence it follows, that to make the ſame body, no "more is required, but reſtoring life to the organized "parts of it." If the queſtion were about raiſing the ſame plant, I do not ſay but there might be ſome appearance for making ſuch inference from my words as this; "whence it follows, that to make the ſame plant, "no more is required, but to reſtore life to the organ-"ized parts of it." But this deduction, wherein from thoſe words of mine, that ſpeak only of the identity of a plant, your lordſhip infers there is no more required to make the ſame body, than to make the ſame plant, being too ſubtile for me, I leave to my reader to find out.

Your

Your lordship goes on and says, that I grant likewise, "that the identity of the same man consists in a participation of the same continued life, by constantly fleeting particles of matter in succession, vitally united "to the same organized body." Answ. I speak in these words of the identity of the same man; and your lordship thence roundly concludes, "so that there is no "difficulty of the sameness of the body." But your lordship knows, that I do not take these two sounds, man and body, to stand for the same thing; nor the identity of the man to be the same with the identity of the body.

But let us read out your lordship's words: "so that "there is no difficulty as to the sameness of the body, "if life were continued; and if by divine power life be "restored to that material substance, which was before "united, by a re-union of the soul to it, there is no "reason to deny the identity of the body: not from the "consciousness of the soul, but from that life, which is "the result of the union of the soul and body."

If I understand your lordship right, you in these words, from the passages above quoted out of my book, argue, that from those words of mine it will follow, that it is or may be the same body, that is raised at the resurrection. If so, my lord, your lordship has then proved, that my book is not inconsistent with, but conformable to this article of the resurrection of the same body, which your lordship contends for, and will have to be an article of faith: for though I do by no means deny that the same bodies shall be raised at the last day, yet I see nothing your lordship has said to prove it to be an article of faith.

But your lordship goes on with your proofs, and says: "but St. Paul still supposes that it must be that mate-"rial substance to which the soul was before united. "For, saith he, "it is sown in corruption, it is raised "in incorruption; it is sown in dishonour, it is raised "in glory; it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power; "it is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body." "Can such a material substance, which was never united "to the body, be said to be sown in corruption, and

" weakneſs, and diſhonour? Either therefore he muſt " ſpeak of the ſame body, or his meaning cannot be " comprehended." I anſwer, " can ſuch a material " ſubſtance which was never laid in the grave, be ſaid " to be ſown," &c.? For your lordſhip ſays, " you do " not ſay the ſame individual particles, which were " united at the point of death, ſhall be raiſed at the laſt " day;" and no other particles are laid in the grave, but ſuch as are united at the point of death; either therefore your lordſhip muſt ſpeak of another body different from that which was ſown, which ſhall be raiſed; or elſe your meaning, I think, cannot be comprehended.

But whatever be your meaning, your lordſhip proves it to be St. Paul's meaning, that the ſame body ſhall be raiſed which was ſown, in theſe following words: " for " what does all this relate to a conſcious principle?" Anſw. The ſcripture being expreſs, that the ſame perſons ſhould be raiſed and appear before the judgment-ſeat of Chriſt, that every one may receive according to what he had done in his body; it was very well ſuited to common apprehenſions (which refined not about " particles that had been vitally united to the ſoul") to ſpeak of the body which each one was to have after the reſurrection, as he would be apt to ſpeak of it himſelf. For it being his body both before and after the reſurrection, every one ordinarily ſpeaks of his body as the ſame, though in a ſtrict and philoſophical ſenſe, as your lordſhip ſpeaks, it be not the very ſame. Thus it is no impropriety of ſpeech to ſay, " this body of mine " which was formerly ſtrong and plump, is now weak " and waſted;" though, in ſuch a ſenſe as you are ſpeaking here, it be not the ſame body. Revelation declares nothing any where concerning the ſame body, in your lordſhip's ſenſe of the ſame body, which appears not to have been then thought of. The apoſtle directly propoſes nothing for or againſt the ſame body, as neceſſary to be believed: that which he is plain and direct in, is his oppoſing and condemning ſuch curious queſtions about the body, which could ſerve only to perplex, not to confirm what was material and neceſſary for them to believe, viz. a day of judgment and retribution to men in a future ſtate; and therefore it is no wonder that, mentioning their bodies, he ſhould uſe a way of ſpeaking ſuited to vulgar notions, from which it would be hard poſitively to conclude any thing for the determining of this queſtion (eſpecially againſt expreſſions in the ſame diſcourſe that plainly incline to the other ſide) in a matter which, as it appears, the apoſtle thought not neceſſary to determine, and the Spirit of God thought not fit to gratify any one's curioſity in.

in

But your lordſhip ſays, "the apoſtle ſpeaks plainly "of that body which was once quickened, and after-"wards falls to corruption, and is to be reſtored with "more noble qualities." I wiſh your lordſhip had quoted the words of St. Paul, wherein he ſpeaks plainly of that numerical body that was once quickened; they would preſently decide this queſtion. But your lordſhip proves it by theſe following words of St. Paul: "for this corruption muſt put on incorruption, and "this mortal muſt put on immortality:" to which your lordſhip adds, "that you do not ſee how he could "more expreſly affirm the identity of this corruptible "body with that after the reſurrection." How expreſly it is affirmed by the apoſtle, ſhall be conſidered by and by. In the mean time, it is paſt doubt that your lordſhip beſt knows what you do or do not ſee. But this I will be bold to ſay, that if St. Paul had any where in this chapter (where there are ſo many occaſions for it, if it had been neceſſary to have been believed) but ſaid in expreſs words, that the ſame bodies ſhould be raiſed; every one elſe who thinks of it, will ſee he had more expreſly affirmed the identity of the bodies which men now have, with thoſe they ſhall have after the reſurrection.

The remainder of your lordſhip's period, is: "and "that without any reſpect to the principle of ſelf-con-"ſciouſneſs." Anſw. Theſe words, I doubt not, have ſome meaning, but I muſt own, I know not what; either towards the proof of the reſurrection of the ſame body, or to ſhow that any thing I have ſaid concerning ſelf-conſciouſneſs is inconſiſtent: for I do not remember that I have any where ſaid, that the identity of body conſiſted in ſelf-conſciouſneſs.

From your preceding words, your lordſhip concludes thus: "and ſo if the ſcripture be the ſole foundation of "our faith, this is an article of it." My lord, to make the concluſion unqueſtionable, I humbly conceive, the words muſt run thus: "and ſo if the ſcripture, and your "lordſhip's interpretation of it, be the ſole foundation "of our faith; the reſurrection of the ſame body is an "article of it." For, with ſubmiſſion, your lordſhip has neither produced expreſs words of ſcripture for it, nor ſo proved that to be the meaning of any of thoſe words of ſcripture which you have produced for it, that a man who reads and ſincerely endeavours to underſtand the ſcripture, cannot but find himſelf obliged to believe, as expreſly, "that the ſame bodies of the dead," in your lordſhip's ſenſe, ſhall be raiſed, as "that the dead "ſhall be raiſed." And I crave leave to give your lordſhip this one reaſon for it:

1 Cor. xv. He who reads with attention this diſcourſe of St. Paul, where he diſcourſes of the reſurrection, will ſee that he plainly diſtinguiſhes between the dead that ſhall be raiſed, and the bodies of the dead. For it is νεκροὶ, πάντες, οἱ, are the nominative caſes to ἐγείρονται, ζωοποιηθήσονται, ἐγερθήσονται, all along, and not σώματα, bodies, which one may with reaſon think would ſomewhere or other have been expreſſed, if all this had been ſaid, to propoſe it as an article of faith, that the very ſame bodies ſhould be raiſed. The ſame manner of ſpeaking the Spirit of God obſerves all through the New Teſtament, where it is ſaid, "raiſe* the dead, "quicken or make alive the dead, the reſurrection of the "dead." Nay, theſe very words of our † Saviour, urged by your lordſhip for the reſurrection of the ſame body, run thus: Πάντες οἱ ἐν τοῖς μνημείοις ἀκούσονται τῆς φωνῆς αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἐκπορεύσονται, οἱ τὰ ἀγαθὰ ποιήσαντες εἰς ἀνάστασιν ζωῆς, οἱ

Ver. 15, 22, 23, 29, 32, 35, 52.

* Matt. xxii. 31. Mark xii. 26. John v. 21. Acts xxvi. 7. Rom. iv. 17. 2 Cor. i. 9. 1 Theſſ. iv. 14, 16.

† John v. 28, 29.

δὲ τὰ φαῦλα πράξαντες εἰς ἀνάστασιν κρίσεως. Would not a well-meaning searcher of the scriptures be apt to think, that if the thing here intended by our Saviour were to teach and propose it as an article of faith, necessary to be believed by every one, that the very same bodies of the dead should be raised; would not, I say, any one be apt to think, that if our Saviour meant so, the words should rather have been, πάντα τὰ σώματα ἃ ἐν τοῖς μνημείοις. i. e. "all the bodies that are in the graves," rather than all who are in the "graves;" which must denote persons, and not precisely bodies?

Another evidence, that St. Paul makes a distinction between the dead and the bodies of the dead, so that the dead cannot be taken in this 1 Cor. xv. to stand precisely for the bodies of the dead, are these words of the apostle: "but some man will say, how are "the dead raised, and with what bodies do "they come?" Which words "dead" and "they," if supposed to stand precisely for the bodies of the dead, the question will run thus: "how are the dead bodies "raised, and with what bodies do the dead bodies "come?" which seems to have no very agreeable sense. Ver. 35.

This therefore being so, that the spirit of God keeps so expressly to this phrase or form of speaking in the New Testament, "of raising, quickening, rising, resurrec-"tion, &c. of the dead," where the resurrection at the last day is spoken of; and that the body is not mentioned, but in answer to this question, "with what "bodies shall those dead, who are raised, come?" So that by the dead cannot precisely be meant the dead bodies: I do not see but a good christian, who reads the scripture with an intention to believe all that is there revealed to him concerning the resurrection, may acquit himself of his duty therein, without entering into the inquiry whether the dead shall have the very same bodies or no; which sort of inquiry the apostle, by the appellation he bestows here on him that makes it, seems not much to encourage. Nor, if he shall think himself bound to determine concerning the identity of the bodies of the dead raised at the last day, will he, by the remainder of St. Paul's answer, find the determination of the apoſtle to be much in favour of the very ſame body; unleſs the being told, that the body ſown is not that body that ſhall be; that the body raiſed is as different from that which was laid down, as the fleſh of man is from the fleſh of beaſts, fiſhes, and birds, or as the ſun, moon, and ſtars are different one from another; or as different as a corruptible, weak, natural, mortal body, is from an incorruptible, powerful, ſpiritual, immortal body; and laſtly, as different as a body that is fleſh and blood, is from a body that is not fleſh and blood; "for 1 Cor. xv. 50. "fleſh and blood cannot, ſays St. Paul in "this very place, inherit the kingdom of "God:" unleſs, I ſay, all this, which is contained in St. Paul's words, can be ſuppoſed to be the way to deliver this as an article of faith, which is required to be believed by every one, viz. "that the dead ſhould "be raiſed with the very ſame bodies that they had "before in this life;" which article, propoſed in theſe or the like plain and expreſs words, could have left no room for doubt in the meaneſt capacities, nor for conteſt in the moſt perverſe minds.

Your lordſhip adds, in the next words; "and ſo it "hath been always underſtood by the chriſtian church, "viz. that the reſurrection of the ſame body, in your "lordſhip's ſenſe of ſame body, is an article of faith." Anſw. What the chriſtian church has always underſtood, is beyond my knowledge. But for thoſe who coming ſhort of your lordſhip's great learning, cannot gather their articles of faith from the underſtanding of all the whole chriſtian church, ever ſince the preaching of the goſpel (who make far the greater part of chriſtians, I think I may ſay, nine hundred ninety and nine of a thouſand) but are forced to have recourſe to the ſcripture to find them there; I do not ſee, that they will eaſily find there this propoſed as an article of faith, that there ſhall be a reſurrection of the ſame body; but that there ſhall be a reſurrection of the dead, without explicitly determining, that they ſhall be raiſed with bodies made up wholly of the ſame particles which were once vitally united to their ſouls, in their former life; without the mixture of any one other particle of matter, which is that which your lordſhip means by the ſame body.

which

But ſuppoſing your lordſhip to have demonſtrated this to be an article of faith, though I crave leave to own, that I do not ſee that all your lordſhip has ſaid here makes it ſo much as probable; what is all this to me? Yes, ſays your lordſhip in the following words, " my " idea of perſonal identity is inconſiſtent with it, for it " makes the ſame body which was here united to the " ſoul, not to be neceſſary to the doctrine of the reſur- " rection. But any material ſubſtance united to the " ſame principle of conſciouſneſs, makes the ſame " body."

This is an argument of your lordſhip's which I am obliged to anſwer to. But is it not fit I ſhould firſt underſtand it, before I anſwer it? Now here I do not well know, what it is " to make a thing not be neceſſary to " the doctrine of the reſurrection." But to help myſelf out the beſt way I can with a gueſs, I will conjecture (which, in diſputing with learned men, is not very ſafe) your lordſhip's meaning is, that " my idea of perſonal " identity makes it not neceſſary," that, for the raiſing the ſame perſon, the body ſhould be the ſame.

Your lordſhip's next word is, " but;" to which I am ready to reply, but what? What does my idea of perſonal identity do? For ſomething of that kind the adverſative particle " but" ſhould, in the ordinary conſtruction of our language, introduce, to make the propoſition clear and intelligible: but here is no ſuch thing; " but" is one of your lordſhip's privileged particles, which I muſt not meddle with, for fear your lordſhip complain of me again, " as ſo ſevere a critic, that for the leaſt " ambiguity in any particle, fill up pages in my anſwer, " to make my book look conſiderable for the bulk of " it. But ſince this propoſition here, my idea of per- " ſonal identity makes the ſame body, which was here " united to the ſoul, not neceſſary to the doctrine of the " reſurrection; but any material ſubſtance being united " to the ſame principle of conſciouſneſs, makes the ſame " body; is brought to prove my idea of perſonal iden- " tity inconſiſtent with the article of the reſurrection:"

I muſt

I muſt make it out in ſome direct ſenſe or other, that I may ſee whether it be both true and concluſive. I therefore venture to read it thus "my idea of perſonal iden-"tity makes the ſame body which was here united to "the ſoul, not to be neceſſary at the reſurrection; but "allows that any material ſubſtance being united to the "ſame principle of conſciouſneſs, makes the ſame body: "Ergo, my idea of perſonal identity is inconſiſtent "with the article of the reſurrection of the ſame body."

If this be your lordſhip's ſenſe in this paſſage, as I here have gueſſed it to be; or elſe I know not what it is: I anſwer,

1. "That my idea of perſonal identity does not allow "that any material ſubſtance being united to the ſame "principle of conſciouſneſs, makes the ſame body." I ſay no ſuch thing in my book, nor any thing from whence it may be inferred; and your lordſhip would have done me a favour, to have ſet down the words where I ſay ſo, or thoſe from which you infer ſo, and ſhowed how it follows from any thing I have ſaid.

2. Granting that it were a conſequence from my idea of perſonal identity, that "any material ſubſtance being "united to the ſame principle of conſciouſneſs, makes "the ſame body;" this would not prove that my idea of perſonal identity was inconſiſtent with this propoſition, "that the ſame body ſhall be raiſed;" but on the contrary, affirms it: ſince if I affirm, as I do, that the ſame perſons ſhall be raiſed, and it be a conſequence of my idea of perſonal identity, that "any material ſub-"ſtance being united to the ſame principle of con-"ſciouſneſs, makes the ſame body;" it follows, that if the ſame perſon be raiſed, the ſame body muſt be: and ſo I have herein not only ſaid nothing inconſiſtent with the reſurrection of the ſame body, but have ſaid more for it than your lordſhip. For there can be nothing plainer, than that in the ſcripture it is revealed, that the ſame perſons ſhall be raiſed, and appear before the judgment-ſeat of Chriſt, to anſwer for what they have done in their bodies. If therefore whatever matter be joined to the ſame principle of conſciouſneſs, makes the

ſame

ſame body; it is demonſtration, that if the ſame perſons are raiſed, they have the ſame bodies.

How then your lordſhip makes this an inconſiſtency with the reſurrection, is beyond my conception. "Yes, "ſays your lordſhip, it is inconſiſtent with it, for it "makes the ſame body which was here united to the "ſoul, not to be neceſſary."

3. I anſwer therefore, thirdly, that this is the firſt time I ever learnt, that "not neceſſary" was the ſame with "inconſiſtent." I ſay, that a body made up of the ſame numerical parts of matter, is not neceſſary to the making of the ſame perſon; from whence it will indeed follow, that to the reſurrection of the ſame perſon, the ſame numerical particles of matter are not required. What does your lordſhip infer from hence? to wit, this: therefore he who thinks that the ſame particles of matter are not neceſſary to the making of the ſame perſon, cannot believe that the ſame perſons ſhall be raiſed with bodies, made of the very ſame particles of matter, if God ſhould reveal that it ſhall be ſo, viz. that the ſame perſons ſhall be raiſed with the ſame bodies they had before. Which is all one as to ſay, that he who thought the blowing of rams-horns was not neceſſary in itſelf to the falling down of the walls of Jericho, could not believe that they would fall upon the blowing of rams-horns, when God had declared it ſhould be ſo.

Your lordſhip ſays, "my idea of perſonal identity is "inconſiſtent with the article of the reſurrection;" the reaſon you ground it on, is this, becauſe it makes not the ſame body neceſſary to the making the ſame perſon. Let us grant your lordſhip's conſequence to be good, what will follow from it? No leſs than this, that your lordſhip's notion (for I dare not ſay your lordſhip has any ſo dangerous things as ideas) of perſonal identity, is inconſiſtent with the article of the reſurrection. The demonſtration of it is thus: your lordſhip ſays, it is not neceſſary that the body, to be raiſed at the laſt day, "ſhould conſiſt of the ſame particles of matter, which "were united at the point of death; for there muſt be "a great alteration in them in a lingering diſeaſe, as if "a fat man falls into a conſumption: you do not ſay "the

" the ſame particles which the ſinner had at the very " time of commiſſion of his ſins; for then a long ſinner " muſt have a vaſt body, conſidering the continual " ſpending of particles by perſpiration." And again, here your lordſhip ſays, " you allow the notion of per- " ſonal identity to belong to the ſame man under ſeveral " changes of matter." From which words it is evident, that your lordſhip ſuppoſes a perſon in this world may be continued and preſerved the ſame, in a body not conſiſting of the ſame individual particles of matter; and hence it demonſtratively follows, that let your lordſhip's notion of perſonal identity be what it will, it makes " the ſame body not to be neceſſary to the ſame " perſon;" and therefore it is, by your lordſhip's rule, inconſiſtent with the article of the reſurrection. When your lordſhip ſhall think fit to clear your own notion of perſonal identity from this inconſiſtency with the article of the reſurrection, I do not doubt but my idea of perſonal identity will be thereby cleared too. Till then, all inconſiſtency with that article which your lordſhip has here charged on mine, will unavoidably fall upon your lordſhip's too.

But for the clearing of both, give me leave to ſay, my lord, that whatſoever is not neceſſary, does not thereby become inconſiſtent. It is not neceſſary to the ſame perſon, that his body ſhould always conſiſt of the ſame numerical particles; this is demonſtration, becauſe the particles of the bodies of the ſame perſons in this life change every moment, and your lordſhip cannot deny it; and yet this makes it not inconſiſtent with God's preſerving, if he thinks fit, to the ſame perſons, bodies conſiſting of the ſame numerical particles, always from the reſurrection to eternity. And ſo likewiſe, though I ſay any thing that ſuppoſes it not neceſſary, that the ſame numerical particles, which were vitally united to the ſoul in this life, ſhould be re-united to it at the reſurrection, and conſtitute the body it ſhall then have; yet it is not inconſiſtent with this, that God may, if he pleaſes, give to every one a body conſiſting only of ſuch particles as were before vitally united to his ſoul. And thus, I think, I have cleared my book from all that inconsistency which your lordship charges on it, and would persuade the world it has with the article of the resurrection of the dead.

that

Only before I leave it, I will set down the remainder of what your lordship says upon this head, that though I see not the coherence nor tendency of it, nor the force of any argument in it against me; yet that nothing may be omitted, that your lordship has thought fit to entertain your reader with on this new point, nor any one have reason to suspect, that I have passed by any word of your lordship's (on this now first introduced subject) wherein he might find your lordship had proved what you had promised in your title-page. Your remaining words are these: "the dispute is not how far personal "identity in itself may consist in the very same material "substance; for we allow the notion of personal iden-"tity to belong to the same man under several changes "of matter; but whether it doth not depend upon a "vital union between the soul and body, and the life "which is consequent upon it: and therefore in the "resurrection, the same material substance must be re-"united, or else it cannot be called a resurrection, but "a renovation; i. e. it may be a new life, but not rais-"ing the body from the dead." I confess, I do not see how what is here ushered in, by the words "and "therefore," is a consequence from the preceding words; but as to the propriety of the name, I think it will not be much questioned, that if the same man rise who was dead, it may very properly be called the resurrection of the dead; which is the language of the scripture.

I must not part with this article of the resurrection, without returning my thanks to your lordship for making me take notice of a fault in my Essay. When I writ that book, I took it for granted, as I doubt not but many others have done, that the scripture had mentioned in express terms, "the resurrection of the body:" but upon the occasion your lordship has given me in your last letter to look a little more narrowly into what revelation has declared concerning the resurrection, and finding no such express words in the scripture, as that "the

" the body shall rise or be raised, or the resurrection of " the body;" I shall in the next edition of it change these words of my book, " the dead bodies " of men shall rise," into these of the scripture, " the dead shall rise." Not that I question, that the dead shall be raised with bodies: but in matters of revelation, I think it not only safest, but our duty, as far as any one delivers it for revelation, to keep close to the words of the scripture; unless he will assume to himself the authority of one inspired, or make himself wiser than the Holy Spirit himself: if I had spoken of the resurrection in precisely scripture-terms, I had avoided giving your lordship the occasion of making here such a verbal reflection on my words; " What, " not if there be an idea of identity as to the body?"

Essay, b. iv. c. 18. § 7.

I come now to your lordship's second head of accusation: your lordship says,

2. " The next articles of faith, which my notion of " ideas is inconsistent with, are no less than those of " the Trinity and the incarnation of our Saviour." But all the proof of inconsistency your lordship here brings, being drawn from my notions of nature and person, whereof so much has been said already, the swelling my answer into too great a volume, will excuse me from setting down at large all that you have said thereupon, so particularly, as I have done in the precedent article of the resurrection, which is wholly new.

Your lordship's way of proving, " that my ideas of " nature and person cannot consist with the articles of " the Trinity and incarnation," is, as far as I can understand it, this, that, I say, we have no simple ideas, but by sensation and reflection. " But, says your lord- " ship, we cannot have any simple ideas of nature and " person, by sensation and reflection; ergo, we can " come to no certainty about the distinction of nature " and person in my way of ideas." Answ. If your lordship had concluded from thence, that therefore in my way of ideas, we can have no ideas at all of nature and person, it would have had some appearance of a consequence; but as it is, it seems to me such an argument as this: No simple colours, in sir Godfry Kneller's way way of painting, come into his exact and lively pictures, but by his pencil; but no simple colours of a ship and a man come into his pictures by his pencil; ergo, "we "can come to no certainty about the distinction of a "ship and a man, in sir Godfry Kneller's way of paint-"ing."

Your lordship says, "it is not possible for us to have "any simple ideas of nature and person by sensation "and reflection," and I say so too; as impossible as it is to have a true picture of a rainbow in one simple colour, which consists in the arrangement of many colours. The ideas signified by the sounds nature and person, are each of them complex ideas; and therefore it is as impossible to have a simple idea of either of them, as to have a multitude in one, or a composition in a simple. But if your lordship means, that by sensation and reflection we cannot have the simple ideas, of which the complex ones of nature and person are compounded; that I must crave leave to dissent from, till your lord-ship can produce a definition (in intelligible words) either of nature or person, in which all that is contained cannot ultimately be resolved into simple ideas of sen-sation and reflection.

Your lordship's definition of person, is, "that it is a "complete intelligent substance with a peculiar man-"ner of subsistence." And my definition of person, which your lordship quotes out of my Essay, is, "that "person stands for a thinking intelligent being, that "has reason and reflection, and can consider itself as "itself, the same thinking thing in different times and "places." When your lordship shall show any repug-nancy in this my idea (which I denote by the sound person) to the incarnation of our Saviour, with which your lordship's notion of person may not be equally charged; I shall give your lordship an answer to it. This I say in answer to these words, "which is repug-"nant to the article of the incarnation of our Saviour:" for the preceding reason, to which they refer, I must own I do not understand.

The word person naturally signifies nothing, that you allow; your lordship, in your definition of it, makes it stand ſtand for a general abſtract idea. Perſon then, in your lordſhip, is liable to the ſame default which you lay on it in me, viz. that "it is no more than a notion in the "mind." The ſame will be ſo of the word nature, whenever your lordſhip pleaſes to define it; without which you can have no notion of it. And then the conſequence, which you there draw from their being no more than notions of the mind, will hold as much in reſpect of your lordſhip's notion of nature and perſon as of mine, viz. "that one nature and three perſons can be "no more." This I crave leave to ſay in anſwer to all that your lordſhip has been pleaſed to urge from p. 46, to theſe words of your lordſhip's, p. 52.

General terms (as nature and perſon are in their ordinary uſe in our language) are the ſigns of general ideas, and general ideas exiſt only in the mind; but particular things (which are the foundations of theſe general ideas, if they are abſtracted as they ſhould be) do, or may exiſt conformable to thoſe general ideas, and ſo fall under thoſe general names; as he that writes this paper is a perſon to him, i. e. may be denominated a perſon by him to whoſe abſtract idea of perſon he bears a conformity; juſt as what I here write, is to him a book or a letter, to whoſe abſtract idea of a book or a letter it agrees. This is what I have ſaid concerning this matter all along, and what, I humbly conceive, will ſerve for an anſwer to thoſe words of your lordſhip, where you ſay, "you affirm that thoſe who make nature and per-"ſon to be only abſtract and complex ideas, can neither "defend nor reaſonably believe the doctrine of the "Trinity;" and to all that you ſay, p. 52—58. Only give me leave to wiſh, that what your lordſhip, out of a miſtake of what I ſay concerning the ideas of nature and perſon, has urged, as you pretend, againſt them, do not furniſh your adverſaries in that diſpute, with ſuch arguments againſt you as your lordſhip will not eaſily anſwer.

Your lordſhip ſets down theſe words of mine, "per-"ſon in itſelf ſignifies nothing; but as ſoon as the "common uſe of any language has appropriated it to "any idea, then that is the true idea of a perſon;"

which

which words your lordſhip interprets thus: i. e. " men " may call a perſon what they pleaſe, for there is no- " thing but common uſe required to it: they may call " a horſe, or a tree, or a ſtone, a perſon, if they think " fit." Anſw. Men, before common uſe had appropriated this name to that complex idea which they now ſignify by the ſound perſon, might have denoted it by the ſound ſtone, and vice verſa: but can your lordſhip thence argue, as you do here, men are at the ſame liberty in a country where thoſe words are already in common uſe? There he that will ſpeak properly, and ſo as to be underſtood, muſt appropriate each ſound uſed in that language to an idea in his mind (which to himſelf is defining the word) which is in ſome degree conformable to the idea that others apply it to.

Your lordſhip, in the next paragraph, ſets down my definition of the word perſon, viz. " that perſon ſtands " for a thinking intelligent being that hath reaſon and " reflection, and can conſider itſelf as itſelf, the ſame " thinking being in different times and places;" and then aſk many queſtions upon it. I ſhall ſet down your lordſhip's definition of perſon, which is this; " a per- " ſon is a complete intelligent ſubſtance with a peculiar " manner of ſubſiſtence:" and then crave leave to aſk your lordſhip the ſame queſtions concerning it, which your lordſhip here aſks me concerning mine: " how " comes perſon to ſtand for this and nothing elſe? from " whence comes complete ſubſtance, or peculiar man- " ner of ſubſiſtence, to make up the idea of a perſon? " Whether it be true or falſe, I am not now to inquire; " but how it comes into this idea of a perſon? Has " common uſe of our language appropriated it to this " ſenſe? If not, this ſeems to me a mere arbitrary idea, " and may as well be denied as affirmed. And what a " fine paſs are we come to, in your lordſhip's way, if a " mere arbitrary idea muſt be taken into the only true " method of certainty?——But if this be the true idea " of a perſon, then there can be no union of two natures " in one perſon. For if a complete intelligent ſub- " ſtance be the idea of a perſon, and the divine and " human natures be complete intelligent ſubſtances;

" then the doctrine of the union of two natures and one " perſon is quite ſunk, for here muſt be two perſons in " this way of your lordſhip's. Again, if this be the " idea of a perſon, then where there are three perſons, " there muſt be three diſtinct complete intelligent ſub- " ſtances; and ſo there cannot be three perſons in the " ſame individual eſſence. And thus both theſe doc- " trines of the Trinity and incarnation are paſt recovery " gone, if this way, of your lordſhip's, hold." Theſe, my lord, are your lordſhip's very words; what force there is in them, I will not inquire: but I muſt beſeech your lordſhip to take them as objections I make againſt your notion of perſon, to ſhow the danger of it, and the inconſiſtency it has with the doctrine of the Trinity and incarnation of our Saviour; and when your lordſhip has removed the objections that are in them, againſt your own definition of perſon, mine alſo, by the very ſame anſwers, will be cleared.

Your lordſhip's argument, in the following words, to page 65, ſeems to me (as far as I can collect) to lie thus: your lordſhip tells me, that I ſay, " that in pro- " poſitions, whoſe certainty is built on clear and per- " fect ideas, and evident deductions of reaſon, there no " propoſition can be received for divine revelation " which contradicts them." This propoſition, not ſerving your lordſhip's turn ſo well, for the concluſion you deſigned to draw from it, your lordſhip is pleaſed to enlarge it. For you aſk, " But ſuppoſe I have ideas " ſufficient for certainty, what is to be done then?" From which words and your following diſcourſe, if I can underſtand it, it ſeems to me, that your lordſhip ſuppoſes it reaſonable for me to hold, that wherever we are any how certain of any propoſitions, whether their certainty be built on clear and perfect ideas or no, there no propoſition can be received for divine revelation, which contradicts them. And thence your lordſhip concludes, that becauſe I ſay we may make ſome pro- poſitions, of whoſe truth we may be certain concerning things, whereof we have not ideas in all their parts per- fectly clear and diſtinct; " therefore my notion of cer- " tainty by ideas, muſt overthrow the credibility of a " mat-

" matter of faith in all ſuch propoſitions, which are " offered to be believed on the account of divine reve- " lation:" a concluſion which I am ſo unfortunate as not to find how it follows from your lordſhip's premiſes, becauſe I cannot any way bring them into mode and figure with ſuch a concluſion. But this being no ſtrange thing to me in my want of ſkill in your lordſhip's way of writing, I, in the mean time, crave leave to aſk, Whether there be any propoſitions your lordſhip can be certain of, that are not divinely revealed? And here I will preſume that your lordſhip is not ſo ſceptical, but that you can allow certainty attainable in many things, by your natural faculties. Give me leave then to aſk your lordſhip, Whether, where there be propoſitions, of whoſe truth you have certain knowledge, you can receive any propoſition for divine revelation, which contradicts that certainty? Whether that certainty be built upon the agreement of ideas, ſuch as we have, or on whatever elſe your lordſhip builds it? If you cannot, as I preſume your lordſhip will ſay you cannot, I make bold to return you your lordſhip's queſtions here to me, in your own words: " let us now ſuppoſe that you are " to judge of a propoſition delivered as a matter of faith, " where you have a certainty by reaſon from your " grounds, ſuch as they are? Can you, my lord, aſſent " to this as a matter of faith, when you are already cer- " tain of the contrary by your way? How is this poſſi- " ble? Can you believe that to be true, which you are " certain is not true? Suppoſe it to be, that there are " two natures in one perſon, the queſtion is, whether " you can aſſent to this as a matter of faith? If you " ſhould ſay, where there are only probabilities on the " other ſide, I grant that you then allow revelation is to " prevail. But when you ſay you have certainty by " ideas, or without ideas to the contrary, I do not ſee " how it is poſſible for you to aſſent to a matter of faith " as true, when you are certain, from your method, " that it is not true. For how can you believe againſt " certainty—becauſe the mind is actually determined " by certainty. And ſo your lordſhip's notion of cer- " tainty by ideas, or without ideas, be it what it will,

" muſt overthrow the credibility of a matter of faith in " all ſuch propoſitions, which are offered to be believed " on the account of divine revelation." This argumentation and concluſion is good againſt your lordſhip, if it be good againſt me: for certainty is certainty, and he that is certain is certain, and cannot aſſent to " that " as true, which he is certain is not true," whether he ſuppoſes certainty to conſiſt in the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of ideas, ſuch as a man has, or in any thing elſe. For whether thoſe who have attained certainty, not by the way of ideas, can believe againſt certainty, any more than thoſe who have attained certainty by ideas, we ſhall then ſee, when your lordſhip ſhall be pleaſed to ſhow the world your way to certainty without ideas.

Indeed if what your lordſhip inſinuates in the beginning of this paſſage, which we are now upon, be true, your lordſhip is ſafer (in your way without ideas, i. e. without immediate objects of the mind in thinking, if there be any ſuch way) as to the underſtanding divine revelation right, than thoſe who make uſe of ideas: but yet you are ſtill as far as they from aſſenting to that as true, which you are certain is not true. Your lordſhip's words are: " ſo great a difference is there between " forming ideas firſt, and then judging of revelation by " them, and the believing of revelation on its proper " grounds, and the interpreting the ſenſe of it by due " meaſures of reaſon." If it be the privilege of thoſe alone who renounce ideas, i. e. the immediate objects of the mind in thinking, to believe revelation on its proper grounds, and the interpreting the ſenſe of it, by the due meaſures of reaſon; I ſhall not think it ſtrange, that any one who undertakes to interpret the ſenſe of revelation, ſhould renounce ideas, i. e. that he who would think right of the meaning of any text of ſcripture, ſhould renounce and lay by all immediate objects of the mind in thinking.

But perhaps your lordſhip does not here extend this difference of believing revelation on its proper grounds, and not on its proper grounds, to all thoſe who are not, and all thoſe who are for ideas. But your lordſhip makes makes this comparison here, only between your lordship and me, who you think am guilty of forming ideas first, and then judging of revelation by them. Answ. If so, then this lays the blame not on my doctrine of ideas, but on my particular ill use of them. That then which your lordship would insinuate of me here, as a dangerous way to mistaking the sense of the scripture, is, "that I form ideas first, and then judge of revela-"tion by them;" i. e. in plain English, that I get to myself, the best I can, the signification of the words, wherein the revelation is delivered, and so endeavour to understand the sense of the revelation delivered in them. And pray, my lord, does your lordship do otherwise? Does the believing of revelation upon its proper grounds, and the due measures of reason, teach you to judge of revelation, before you understand the words it is delivered in; i. e. before you have formed the ideas in your mind, as well as you can, which those words stand for? If the due measures of reason teach your lordship this, I beg the favour of your lordship to tell me those due measures of reason, that I may leave those undue measures of reason, which I have hitherto followed in the interpreting the sense of the scripture; whose sense it seems I should have interpreted first, and understood the signification of the words afterwards.

My lord, I read the revelation of the holy scripture with a full assurance, that all it delivers is true: and though this be a submission to the writings of those inspired authors, which I neither have, nor can have, for those of any other men; yet I use (and know not how to help it, till your lordship show me a better method in those due measures of reason, which you mention) the same way to interpret to myself the sense of that book, that I do of any other. First, I endeavour to understand the words and phrases of the language I read it in, i. e. to form ideas they stand for. If your lordship means any thing else by forming ideas first, I confess I understand it not. And if there be any word or expression, which in that author, or in that place of that author, seems to have a peculiar meaning, i. e. to stand for an idea, which is different from that, which the common uſe of that language has made it a ſign of, that idea alſo I endeavour to form in my mind, by comparing this author with himſelf, and obſerving the deſign of his diſcourſe, ſo that, as far as I can, by a ſincere endeavour, I may have the ſame ideas in every place when I read the words, which the author had when he writ them. But here, my lord, I take care not to take thoſe for words of divine revelation, which are not the words of inſpired writers: nor think myſelf concerned with that ſubmiſſion to receive the expreſſions of fallible men, and to labour to find out their meaning, or, as your lordſhip phraſes it, interpret their ſenſe; as if they were the expreſſions of the ſpirit of God, by the mouths or pens of men inſpired and guided by that infallible ſpirit. This, my lord, is the method I uſe in interpreting the ſenſe of the revelation of the ſcriptures; if your lordſhip knows that I do otherwiſe, I deſire you to convince me of it; and if your lordſhip does otherwiſe, I deſire you to ſhow me wherein your method differs from mine, that I may reform upon ſo good a pattern: for as for what you accuſe me of in the following words, it is that which either has no fault in it, or if it has, your lordſhip, I humbly conceive, is as guilty as I. Your words are,

" I may pretend what I pleaſe, that I hold the aſſur-" ance of faith, and the certainty by ideas, to go upon
" very different grounds; but when a propoſition is " offered to me out of ſcripture to be believed, and I " doubt about the ſenſe of it, is not recourſe to be made " to my ideas?" Give me leave, my lord, with all ſubmiſſion, to return your lordſhip the ſame words: " Your " lordſhip may pretend what you pleaſe, that you hold
" the aſſurance of faith, and the certainty of knowledge
" to ſtand upon different grounds," (for I preſume your lordſhip will not ſay, that believing and knowing ſtand upon the ſame grounds, for that would, I think, be to ſay, that probability and demonſtration are the ſame thing) " but when a propoſition is offered you out of
" ſcripture to be believed, and you doubt about the ſenſe
" of it, is not recourſe to be made to your notions?"
What, my lord, is the difference here between your lordſhip's and my way in the caſe? I muſt have recourſe to my ideas, and your lordſhip muſt have recourſe to your notions. For I think you cannot believe a propoſition contrary to your own notions; for then you would have the ſame, and different notions, at the ſame time. So that all the difference between your lordſhip and me, is, that we do both the ſame thing; only your lordſhip ſhows a great diſlike to my uſing the term idea.

But the inſtance your lordſhip here gives, is beyond my comprehenſion. You ſay, "a propoſition is offered "me out of ſcripture to be believed, and I doubt about "the ſenſe of it.——As in the preſent caſe, whether "there can be three perſons in one nature, or two na-"tures and one perſon." My lord, my Bible is faulty again; for I do not remember that I ever read in it either of theſe propoſitions, in theſe preciſe words, "there are three perſons in one nature, or, there are "two natures and one perſon." When your lordſhip ſhall ſhow me a Bible wherein they are ſo ſet down, I ſhall then think them a good inſtance of propoſitions offered me out of ſcripture; till then, whoever ſhall ſay that they are propoſitions in the ſcripture, when there are no ſuch words, ſo put together, to be found in holy writ, ſeems to me to make a new ſcripture in words and propoſitions, that the Holy Ghoſt dictated not. I do not here queſtion their truth, nor deny that they may be drawn from the ſcripture: but I deny that theſe very propoſitions are in expreſs words in my Bible. For that is the only thing I deny here; if your lordſhip can ſhow them me in yours, I beg you to do it.

In the mean time, taking them to be as true as if they were the very words of divine revelation; the queſtion then is, how muſt we interpret the ſenſe of them? For ſuppoſing them to be divine revelation, to aſk, as your lordſhip here does, what reſolution I, or any one, can come to about their poſſibility, ſeems to me to involve a contradiction in it. For whoever admits a propoſition to be of divine revelation, ſuppoſes it not only to be poſſible, but true. Your lordſhip's queſtion then can mean only this, what ſenſe can I, upon my principles, come to, of either of theſe propoſitions, but in the way of ideas? And I crave leave to aſk your lordſhip, what ſenſe of them can your lordſhip upon your principles come to, but in the way of notions? Which, in plain Engliſh, amounts to no more than this, that your lordſhip muſt underſtand them according to the ſenſe you have of thoſe terms they are made up of, and I according to the ſenſe I have of thoſe terms. Nor can it be otherwiſe, unleſs your lordſhip can take a term in any propoſition to have one ſenſe, and yet underſtand it in another: and thus we ſee, that in effect men have differently underſtood and interpreted the ſenſe of theſe propoſitions; whether they uſed the way of ideas or not, i. e. whether they called what any word ſtood for, notion, or ſenſe, or meaning, or idea.

I think myſelf obliged to return your lordſhip my thanks, for the news you write me here, of one who has found a ſecret way how the ſame body may be in diſtant places at once. It making no part, that I can ſee, of the reaſoning your lordſhip was then upon, I can take it only for a piece of news: and the favour was the greater, that your lordſhip was pleaſed to ſtop yourſelf in the midſt of ſo ſerious an argument as the articles of the Trinity and incarnation, to tell it me. And methinks it is pity that author had not uſed ſome of the words of my book, which might have ſerved to have tied him and me together. For his ſecret about a body in two places at once, which he does keep up; and "my "ſecret about certainty, which your lordſhip thinks "had been better kept up too," being all your words; bring me into his company but very untowardly. If your lordſhip would be pleaſed to ſhow, that my ſecret about certainty (as you think fit to call it) is falſe or erroneous, the world would ſee a good reaſon why you ſhould think it better kept up; till then perhaps they may be apt to ſuſpect, that the fault is not ſo much in my publiſhed ſecret about certainty, as ſomewhere elſe. But ſince your lordſhip thinks it had been better kept up, I promiſe that, as ſoon as you ſhall do me the favour to make public a better notion of certainty than mine, I will by a public retraction call in mine: which I hope your lordſhip will do, for I dare ſay nobody will think it it good or friendly advice to your lordſhip, if you have ſuch a ſecret, that you ſhould keep it up.

Your lordſhip, with ſome emphaſis, bids me obſerve my own words, that I here poſitively ſay, "that the "mind not being certain of the truth of that it doth "not evidently know." So that it is plain here, that "I place certainty only in evident knowledge, or in "clear and diſtinct ideas; and yet my great complaint "of your lordſhip was, that you charged this upon me, "and now your lordſhip finds it in my own words." Anſw. My own words, in that place, are, "the mind "is not certain of what it doth not evidently know;" but in them, or that paſſage, as ſet down by your lordſhip, there is not the leaſt mention of clear and diſtinct ideas; and therefore I ſhould wonder to hear your lordſhip ſo ſolemnly call them my own words, when they are but what your lordſhip would have to be a conſequence of my words; were it not, as I humbly conceive, a way not unfrequent with your lordſhip to ſpeak of that, which you think a conſequence from any thing ſaid, as if it were the very thing ſaid. It reſts therefore upon your lordſhip to prove that evident knowledge can be only where the ideas concerning which it is, are perfectly clear and diſtinct. I am certain, that I have evident knowledge, that the ſubſtance of my body and ſoul exiſts, though I am as certain that I have but a very obſcure and confuſed idea of any ſubſtance at all: ſo that my complaint of your lordſhip, upon that account, remains very well founded, notwithſtanding any thing you allege here.

Your lordſhip, ſumming up the force of what you have ſaid, adds, "that you have pleaded, (1.) That my "method of certainty ſhakes the belief of revelation in "general. (2.) That it ſhakes the belief of particular "propoſitions or articles of faith, which depend upon "the ſenſe of words contained in ſcripture."

That your lordſhip has pleaded, I grant; but, with ſubmiſſion, I deny that you have proved,

(1.) That my definition of knowledge, which is that which your lordſhip calls my method of certainty, ſhakes the belief of revelation in general. For all that your lordlordſhip offers for proof of it, is only the alleging ſome other paſſages out of my book, quite different from that my definition of knowledge, which, you endeavour to ſhow, do ſhake the belief of revelation in general: but indeed have not, nor, I humbly conceive, cannot ſhow, that they do any ways ſhake the belief of revelation in general. But if they did, it does not at all follow from thence, that my definition of knowledge; i. e. my method of certainty, at all ſhakes the belief of revelation in general, which was what your lordſhip undertook to prove.

(2.) As to the ſhaking the belief of particular propoſitions or articles of faith, which depend, as you here ſay, upon the ſenſe of words; I think I have ſufficiently cleared myſelf from that charge, as will yet be more evident from what your lordſhip here farther urges.

Your lordſhip ſays, "my placing certainty in the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of ideas, "ſhakes the foundations of the articles of faith [above-"mentioned] which depend upon the ſenſe of words "contained in the ſcripture:" and the reaſon your lordſhip gives for it, is this, "becauſe I do not ſay we "are to believe all that we find there expreſſed." My lord, upon reading theſe words, I conſulted the errata, to ſee whether the printer had injured you: for I could not eaſily believe that your lordſhip ſhould reaſon after a faſhion, that would juſtify ſuch a concluſion as this, viz. your lordſhip, in your letter to me, "does not ſay "that we are to believe all that we find expreſſed in "ſcripture;" therefore your notion of certainty ſhakes the belief of this article of faith, that Jeſus Chriſt deſcended into hell. This, I think, will ſcarce hold for a good conſequence, till not ſaying any truth be the denying of it; and then if my not ſaying in my book, that we are to believe all there expreſſed, be to deny, that we are to believe all that we find there expreſſed, I fear many of your lordſhip's books will be found to ſhake the belief of ſeveral or all the articles of our faith. But ſuppoſing this conſequence to be good, viz. I do not ſay, therefore I deny, and thereby I ſhake the belief of ſome articles of faith; how does this prove, that my placing placing of certainty in the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of ideas, ſhakes any article of faith? unleſs my ſaying, that certainty conſiſts in the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of ideas, B. iv. chap. 12. § 6. of my Eſſay, be a proof, that I do not ſay, in any other part of that book, "that we are to "believe all that we find expreſſed in ſcripture."

But perhaps the remaining words of the period will help us out in your lordſhip's argument, which all together ſtands thus: "becauſe I do not ſay we are to "believe all that we find there expreſſed; but [I do ſay] "in caſe we have any clear and diſtinct ideas, which "limit the ſenſe another way, than the words ſeem to "carry it, we are to judge that to be the true ſenſe." My lord, I do not remember where I ſay what in the latter part of this period your lordſhip makes me ſay: and your lordſhip would have done me a favour to have quoted the place. Indeed I do ſay, in the chapter your lordſhip ſeems to be upon, "that no propoſition can be "received for divine revelation, or obtain the aſſent "due to all ſuch, if it be contradictory to our clear "intuitive knowledge." This is what I there ſay, and all that I there ſay: which in effect is this, that no propoſition can be received for divine revelation, which is contradictory to a ſelf-evident propoſition; and if that be it which your lordſhip makes me ſay here in the foregoing words, I agree to it, and would be glad to know whether your lordſhip differs in opinion from me in it. But this not anſwering your purpoſe, your lordſhip would, in the following words of this paragraph, change ſelf-evident propoſition into a propoſition we have attained certainty of, though by imperfect ideas: in which ſenſe the propoſition your lordſhip argues from as mine, will ſtand thus: that no propoſition can be received for divine revelation, or obtain the aſſent due to all ſuch, if it be contradictory to any propoſition, of whoſe truth we are by any way certain. And then I deſire your lordſhip to name the two contradictory propoſitions, the one of divine revelation, I do not aſſent to; the other, that I have attained to a certainty of by my imperfect ideas, which makes me reject, or not aſſent to that of divine divine revelation. The very ſetting down of theſe two contradictory propoſitions will be demonſtration againſt me, and if your lordſhip cannot (as I humbly conceive you cannot) name any two ſuch propoſitions, it is an evidence, that all this duſt, that is raiſed, is only a great deal of talk about what your lordſhip cannot prove: for that your lordſhip has not yet proved any ſuch thing, I am humbly of opinion I have already ſhown.

Your lordſhip's diſcourſe of Des Cartes, in the following pages, is, I think, as far as I am concerned in it, to ſhow, that certainty cannot be had by ideas; becauſe Des Cartes uſing the term ideas, miſſed of it. Anſw. The queſtion between your lordſhip and me not being about Des Cartes's, but my notion of certainty, your lordſhip will put an end to my notion of certainty by ideas, whenever your lordſhip ſhall prove, that certainty cannot be attained any way by the immediate objects of the mind in thinking, i. e. by ideas; or that certainty does not conſiſt in the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of ideas; or laſtly, when your lordſhip ſhall ſhow us what elſe certainty does conſiſt in. When your lordſhip ſhall do either of theſe three, I promiſe your lordſhip to renounce my notion, or way, or method, or grounds (or whatever elſe your lordſhip has been pleaſed to call it) of certainty by ideas.

The next paragraph is to ſhow the inclination your lordſhip has to favour me in the words "it may be." I ſhall be always ſorry to have miſtaken any one's, eſpecially your lordſhip's inclination to favour me: but ſince the preſs has publiſhed this to the world, the world muſt now be judge of your lordſhip's inclination to favour me.

The three or four following pages are to ſhow, that your lordſhip's exception againſt ideas was not againſt the term ideas, and that I miſtook you in it. Anſw. My lord, I muſt own that there are very few pages of your letters, when I come to examine what is the preciſe meaning of your words, either as making diſtinct propoſitions, or a continued diſcourſe, wherein I do not think myſelf in danger to be miſtaken; but whether in the preſent caſe, one much more learned than I would not not have understood your lordship as I did, must be left to those who will be at the pains to consider your words, and my reply to them. Your lordship saying, "as I "have stated my notion of ideas, it may be of danger-"ous consequence." This seeming too general an accusation, I endeavoured to find what it was more particularly in it, which your lordship thought might be of dangerous consequence. And the first thing I thought you excepted against, was the use of the term idea: but your lordship tells me here, I was mistaken, it was not the term idea you excepted against, but the way of certainty by ideas. To excuse my mistake, I have this to say for myself, that reading in your first letter these express words: "When new terms are made use of by ill "men to promote scepticism and infidelity, and to over-"throw the mysteries of our faith, we then have reason "to inquire into them, and to examine the foundation "and tendency of them;" it could not be very strange, if I understood them to refer to terms: but it seems I was mistaken, and should have understood by them "my "way of certainty by ideas," and should have read your lordship's words thus: "When new terms are made use "of by ill men, to promote scepticism and infidelity, "and to overthrow the mysteries of faith, we have then "reason to inquire into them," i. e. Mr. L's definition of knowledge, (for that is my way of certainty by ideas) "and then to examine the foundation and tendency of "them," i. e. this proposition, viz. that knowledge or certainty consists in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of ideas. "Them," in your lordship's words, as I thought (for I am scarce ever sure what your lordship means by "them") necessarily referring to what ill men made use of for the promoting of scepticism and infidelity, I thought it had referred to terms. Why so? says your lordship: Your quarrel, you say, was not with the term ideas. "But that which you "insisted upon was the way of certainty by ideas, and "the new terms as employed to that purpose;" and therefore it is that which your lordship must be understood to mean, by what "ill men make use of," &c. Now I appeal to my reader, whether I may not be excused, cuſed, if I took them rather to refer to terms, a word in the plural number preceding in the ſame period, than to "way of certainty by ideas," which is the ſingular number, and neither preceding, no nor ſo much as expreſſed in the ſame ſentence? And if by my ignorance in the uſe of the pronoun them, it is my misfortune to be often at a loſs in the underſtanding of your lordſhip's writings, I hope I ſhall be excuſed.

Another excuſe for my underſtanding that one of the things in my book which your lordſhip thought might be of dangerous conſequence, was the term idea, may be found in theſe words of your lordſhip: "But what "need all this great noiſe about ideas and certainty, "true and real certainty by ideas; if after all it comes "only to this, that our ideas only preſent to us ſuch "things from whence we bring arguments to prove "the truth of things? But the world hath been ſtrangely "amuſed with ideas of late; and we have been told, "that ſtrange things might be done by the help of ideas, "and yet theſe ideas at laſt come to be common no-"tions of things, which we muſt make uſe of in our "reaſoning." I ſhall offer one paſſage more for my excuſe, out of the ſame page. I had ſaid in my chapter about the exiſtence of God, I thought it moſt proper to expreſs myſelf in the moſt uſual and familiar way, by common words and expreſſions: "Your lordſhip wiſhes "I had done ſo quite through my book; for then I had "never given that occaſion for the enemies of our faith "to take up my new way of ideas, as an effectual bat-"tery (as they imagined) againſt the myſteries of the "chriſtian faith. But I might have enjoyed the ſatis-"faction of my ideas long enough, before your lord-"ſhip had taken notice of them, unleſs you had found "them employed in doing miſchief." Thus this paſſage ſtands in your lordſhip's former letter, though here your lordſhip gives us but a part of it; and that part your lordſhip breaks off into two, and gives us inverted and in other words. Perhaps thoſe who obſerve this, and better underſtand the arts of controverſy than I do, may find ſome ſkill in it. But your lordſhip breaks off the former paſſage at theſe words, "ſtrange things might "be

" be done by the help of ideas:" and then adding these new ones, i. e. " as to matter of certainty," leaves out those which contain your wish, " that I had expressed " myself in the most usual way by common words and " expressions quite through my book," as I had done in my chapter of the existence of a God; for then, says your lordship, " I had not given that occasion to the " enemies of our faith to take up my new way of ideas, " as an effectual battery, &c." which wish of your lordship's is, that I had all along left out the term idea, as it is plain from my words which you refer to in your wish, as they stand in my first letter; viz. " I thought " it most proper to express myself in the most usual and " familiar way——by common words and known ways " of expression; and therefore, as I think, I have scarce " used the word idea in that whole chapter." Now I must again appeal to my reader, whether your lordship having so plainly wished that I had used common words and expressions in opposition to the term idea, I am not excusable if I took you to mean that term? though your lordship leaves out the wish, and instead of it puts in, i. e. " as to matter of certainty," words which were not in your former letter; though it be for mistaking you in my answer to that letter, that you here blame me. I must own, my lord, my dulness will be very apt to mistake you in expressions seemingly so plain as these, till I can presume myself quick-sighted enough to understand men's meaning in their writings, not by their expressions; which I confess I am not, and is an art I find myself too old now to learn.

But bare mistake is not all; your lordship accuses me also of unfairness and disingenuity in understanding these words of yours, " the world has been strangely amused " with ideas, and yet these ideas at last come to be only " common notions of things, as if in them your lord- " ship owned ideas to be only common notions of " things." To this, my lord, I must humbly crave leave to answer, that there was no unfairness or disingenuity in my saying your lordship owned ideas for such, because I understood you to speak in that place in your own sense; and thereby to show that the new term idea need need not be introduced when it ſignified only the common notions of things, i. e. ſignified no more than notion doth, which is a more uſual word. This I took to be your meaning in that place; and whether I or any one might not ſo underſtand it, without deſerving to be told, that "this is a way of turning things upon your "lordſhip, which you did not expect from me," or ſuch a ſolemn appeal as this, "judge now, how fair and "ingenuous this anſwer is;" I leave to any one, who will but do me the favour to caſt his eye on the firſt paſſage above-quoted, as it ſtands in your lordſhip's own words in your firſt letter. For I humbly beg leave to ſay, that I cannot but wonder to find, that when your lordſhip is charging me with want of fairneſs and ingenuity, you ſhould leave out, in quoting of your own words, thoſe which ſerved moſt to juſtify the ſenſe I had taken them in, and put others in the ſtead of them. In your firſt letter they ſtand thus: "But the world hath "been ſtrangely amuſed with ideas of late, and we have "been told that ſtrange things might be done by the "help of ideas; and yet theſe ideas at laſt come to be "only common notions of things, which we muſt make "uſe of in our reaſoning;" and ſo on, to the end of what is above ſet down: all which I quoted, to ſecure myſelf from being ſuſpected to turn things upon your lordſhip, in a ſenſe which your words (that the reader had before him) would not bear: and in your ſecond letter, in the place now under conſideration, they ſtand thus: "but the world hath been ſtrangely amuſed with "ideas of late, and we have been told that ſtrange things "may be done with ideas, i. e. as to matter of cer-"tainty:" and there your lordſhip ends. Will your lordſhip give me leave now to uſe your own words, "judge "now how fair and ingenuous this is?" words which I ſhould not uſe, but that I find them uſed by your lordſhip in this very paſſage, and upon this very occaſion.

I grant myſelf a mortal man very liable to miſtakes, eſpecially in your writings: but that in my miſtakes, I am guilty of any unfairneſs or diſingenuity, your lordſhip will, I humbly conceive, pardon me, if I think it will paſs for want of fairneſs and ingenuity in any one, with-without clear evidence to accuse me. To avoid any such suspicion, in my first letter I set down every word contained in those pages of your book which I was concerned in; and in my second, I set down most of the passages of your lordship's first answer that I replied to. But because the doing it all along in this, would, I find, too much increase the bulk of my book; I earnestly beg every one, who will think this my reply worth his perusal, to lay your lordship's letter before him, that he may see whether in these pages I direct my answer to, without setting them down at large, there be any thing material unanswered, or unfairly or disingenuously represented.

Your lordship, in the next words, gives a reason why I ought to have understood your words, as a consequence of my assertion, and not as your own sense, viz. "Because you all along distinguish the way of reason, by "deducing one thing from another, from my way of "certainty in the agreement or disagreement of ideas." Answ. I know your lordship does all along talk of reason and my way of ideas, as distinct or opposite: but this is the thing I have and do complain of, that your lordship does speak of them as distinct, without showing wherein they are different, since the perception of the agreement or disagreement of ideas, which is my way of certainty, is also the way of reason. For the perception of the agreement or disagreement of ideas, is either by an immediate comparison of two ideas, as in self-evident propositions; which way of knowledge of truth, is the way of reason; or by the intervention of intermediate ideas, i. e. by the deduction of one thing from another, which is also the way of reason, as I have shown; where I answer to your speaking of certainty placed in good and sound reason, and not in ideas: in which place, as in several others, your lordship opposes ideas and reason, which your lordship calls here distinguishing them. But to continue to speak frequently of two things as different, or of two ways as opposite, without ever showing any difference or opposition in them, after it has been pressed for, is a way of ingenuity which your lordship will pardon to my ignorance, if I have not formerly been acquainted with: and therefore, when you ſhall have ſhown, that reaſoning about ideas, or by ideas, is not the ſame way of reaſoning, as that about or by notions or conceptions, and that what I mean by ideas is not the ſame that your lordſhip means by notions; you will have ſome reaſon to blame me for miſtaking you in the paſſages above-quoted.

For if your lordſhip, in thoſe words, does not except againſt the term ideas, but allows it to have the ſame ſignification with notions, or conceptions, or apprehenſions; then your lordſhip's words will run thus: "But "what need all this great noiſe about notions, or con- "ceptions, or apprehenſions? and the world has been "ſtrangely amuſed with notions, or conceptions, or "apprehenſions of late:" which, whether it be that which your lordſhip will own to be your meaning, I muſt leave to your conſideration.

Your lordſhip proceeds to examine my new method of certainty, as you are pleaſed to call it.

To my aſking, "whether there be any other or older "method of certainty?" your lordſhip anſwers, "that "is not the point; but whether mine be any at all: "which your lordſhip denies." Anſw. I grant, to him that barely denies it to be any at all, it is not the point, whether there be any older; but to him, that calls it a new method, I humbly conceive it will not be thought wholly beſides the point to ſhow an older; at leaſt, that it ought to have prevented theſe following words of your lordſhip's, viz. "that your lordſhip did "never pretend to inform the world of new methods:" which being in anſwer to my deſire, that you would be pleaſed to ſhow me an older, or another method, plainly imply, that your lordſhip ſuppoſes, that whoever will inform the world of another method of certainty than mine, can do it only by informing them of a new one. But ſince this is the anſwer your lordſhip pleaſes to make to my requeſt, I crave leave to conſider it a little.

Your lordſhip having pronounced concerning my definition of knowledge, which you call my method of certainty, that it might be of dangerous conſequence to an article of the chriſtian faith; I deſired you to ſhow

in

in what certainty lies: and desired it of your lordship by these pressing considerations, that it would secure that article of faith against any dangerous consequence from my way, and be a great service to truth in general. To which your lordship replies here, that you did never pretend to inform the world of new methods; and therefore are not bound to go any farther than what you found fault with, which was my new method.

Answ. My lord, I did not desire any new method of you. I observed your lordship, in more places than one, reflected on me for writing out of my own thoughts: and therefore I could not expect from your lordship what you so much condemn in another. Besides, one of the faults you found with my method, was, that it was new: and therefore if your lordship will look again into that passage, where I desire you to set the world right in a thing of that great consequence, as it is to know wherein certainty consists; you will not find, that I mention any thing of a new method of certainty: my words were "another," whether old or new was indifferent. In truth, all that I requested, was only such a method of certainty, as your lordship approved of, and was secure in; and therefore I do not see how your not pretending to inform the world in any new methods, can be any way alleged as a reason, for refusing so useful and so charitable a thing.

Your lordship farther adds, "that you are not bound "to go any farther, than what you found fault with." Answ. I suppose your lordship means, that "you are "not bound by the law of disputation;" nor are you, as I humbly conceive, by this law forbid: or if you were, the law of the schools could not dispense with the eternal divine law of charity. The law of disputing, whence had it its so mighty a sanction? It is at best but the law of wrangling, if it shut out the great ends of information and instruction; and serves only to flatter a little guilty vanity, in a victory over an adversary less skilful in this art of fencing. Who can believe, that upon so slight an account your lordship should neglect your design of writing against me? The great motives of your concern for an article of the christian faith, and of that duty which you profeſs has made you do what you have done, will be believed to work more uniformly in your lordſhip, than to let a father of the church, and a teacher in Iſrael, not tell one who aſks him, which is the right and ſafe way, if he knows it. No, no, my lord, a character ſo much to the prejudice of your charity, nobody will receive of your lordſhip, no, not from yourſelf: whatever your lordſhip may ſay, the world will believe, that you would have given a better method of certainty, if you had had one; when thereby you would have ſecured men from the danger of running into errours in articles of faith, and effectually have recalled them from my way of certainty, which leads, as your lordſhip ſays, to ſcepticiſm and infidelity. For to turn men from a way they are in, the bare telling them it is dangerous, puts but a ſhort ſtop to their going on in it: there is nothing effectual to ſet them a going right, but to ſhow them which is the ſafe and ſure way; a piece of humanity, which when aſked, nobody, as far as he knows, refuſes another; and that I have earneſtly aſked of your lordſhip.

Your lordſhip repreſents to me the unſatisfactorineſs and inconſiſtency of my way of certainty, by telling me, "that it ſeems ſtill a ſtrange thing to you, that I ſhould "talk ſo much of a new method of certainty by ideas; "and yet allow, as I do, ſuch a want of ideas, ſo much "imperfection in them, and ſuch a want of connexion "between our ideas and the things themſelves." Anſw. This objection being ſo viſibly againſt the extent of our knowledge, and not the certainty of it by ideas, would need no other anſwer but this, that it proved nothing to the point; which was to ſhow, that my way by ideas, was no way to certainty at all; not to true certainty, which is a term your lordſhip uſes here, which I ſhall be able to conceive what you mean by, when you ſhall be pleaſed to tell me what falſe certainty is.

But becauſe what you ſay here, is in ſhort what you ground your charge of ſcepticiſm on, in your former letter; I ſhall here, according to my promiſe, conſider what your lordſhip ſays there, and hope you will allow this to be no unfit place.

Your

Your charge of ſcepticiſm, in your former letter, is as followeth.

Your lordſhip's firſt argument conſiſts in theſe propoſitions, viz.

1. That I ſay, Book IV. Chap. 1, that knowledge is the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of ideas.

2. That I go about to prove, that there are very many more beings, of which we have no ideas, than thoſe of which we have; from whence your lordſhip draws this concluſion, "that we are excluded from attaining "any knowledge, as to the far greateſt part of the uni-"verſe:" which I agree to. But with ſubmiſſion, this is not the propoſition to be proved, but this, viz. that my way by ideas, or my way of certainty by ideas, for to that your lordſhip reduces it; i. e. my placing of certainty in the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of ideas; leads to ſcepticiſm.

Farther, from my ſaying, that the intellectual world is greater and more beautiful certainly than the material, your lordſhip argues, that if certainty may be had by general reaſons without particular ideas in one, it may alſo in other caſes. Anſw. It may, no doubt: but this is nothing againſt any thing I have ſaid; for I have neither ſaid, nor ſuppoſe, that certainty by general reaſons, or any reaſons, can be had without ideas; no more than I ſay, or ſuppoſe, that we can reaſon without thinking, or think without immediate objects in our minds in thinking, i. e. think without ideas. But your lordſhip aſks, "whence comes this certainty (for I ſay certainty) where "there be no particular ideas," if knowledge conſiſts in the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of ideas? I anſwer, we have ideas as far as we are certain; and beyond that, we have neither certainty, no nor probability. Every thing which we either know or believe, is ſome propoſition: now no propoſition can be framed as the object of our knowledge or aſſent, wherein two ideas are not joined to, or ſeparated from one another. As for example, when I affirm that "ſomething exiſts "in the world, whereof I have no idea," exiſtence is affirmed of ſomething, ſome being: and I have as clear an idea of exiſtence and ſomething, the two things joined in that propoſition, as I have of them in this propoſition, "ſomething exiſts in the world, whereof I have an "idea." When therefore I affirm, that the intellectual world is greater and more beautiful than the material; whether I ſhould know the truth of this propoſition, either by divine revelation, or ſhould aſſert it as highly probable (which is all I do in that chapter, out of which this inſtance is brought) it means no more but this, viz. that there are more, and more beautiful beings, whereof we have no ideas, than there are of which we have ideas; of which beings, whereof we have no ideas, we can, for want of ideas, have no farther knowledge, but that ſuch beings do exiſt.

Eſſay, b. iv. ch. 3.

If your lordſhip ſhall now aſk me, how I know there are ſuch beings; I anſwer, that, in that chapter of the extent of our knowledge, I do not ſay I know, but I endeavour to ſhow, that it is moſt highly probable: but yet a man is capable of knowing it to be true, becauſe he is capable of having it revealed to him by God, that this propoſition is true, viz. that in the works of God there are more, and more beautiful beings, whereof we have no ideas, than there are whereof we have ideas. If God, inſtead of ſhowing the very things to St. Paul, had only revealed to him, that this propoſition was true, viz. that there were things in heaven, "which neither eye "had ſeen, nor ear had heard, nor had entered into the "heart of man to conceive;" would he not have known the truth of that propoſition of whoſe terms he had ideas, viz. of beings, whereof he had no other ideas, but barely as ſomething, and of exiſtence; though in the want of other ideas of them, he could attain no other knowledge of them but barely that they exiſted? So that in what I have there ſaid, there is no contradiction, nor ſhadow of a contradiction, to my placing knowledge in the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of ideas.

But if I ſhould any where miſtake, and ſay any thing inconſiſtent with that way of certainty of mine; how, I beſeech your lordſhip, could you conclude from thence, that the placing knowledge in the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of ideas tends to ſcepticiſm?

That

That which is the proposition here to be proved, would remain still unproved: for I might say things inconsistent with this proposition, that "knowledge consists in "the perception of the connexion and agreement or "disagreement and repugnancy of our ideas;" and yet that proposition be true, and very far from tending to scepticism, unless your lordship will argue that every proposition that is inconsistent with what a man any where says, tends to scepticism; and then I should be tempted to infer, that many propositions in the letters your lordship has honoured me with, will tend to scepticism.

Your lordship's second argument is from my saying, "we have no ideas of the mechanical affections of the "minute particles of bodies, which hinders our certain "knowledge of universal truths concerning natural bo-"dies:" from whence your lordship concludes, "that "since we can attain to no science, as to bodies or "spirits, our knowledge must be confined to a very "narrow compass." I grant it; but I crave leave to mind your lordship again, that this is not the proposition to be proved: a little knowledge is still knowledge, and not scepticism. But let me have affirmed our knowledge to be comparatively very little; how, I beseech your lordship, does that any way prove, that this proposition, "knowledge consists in the perception of "the agreement or disagreement of our ideas," any way tends to scepticism? which was the proposition to be proved. But the inference your lordship shuts up this head with, in these words: "so that all certainty is "given up in the way of knowledge, as to the visible "and invisible world, or at least the greatest part of "them;" showing in the first part of it what your lordship should have inferred, and was willing to infer; does at last by these words in the close, "or at least the "greatest part of them," I guess, come just to nothing: I say, I guess; for what "them," by grammatical construction, is to be referred to, seems not clear to me.

Your third argument being just of the same kind with the former, only to show, that I reduce our knowledge to a very narrow compaſs, in reſpect of the whole extent of beings; is already anſwered.

In the fourth place, your lordſhip ſets down ſome words of mine concerning reaſoning and demonſtration; and then concludes, "but if there be no way of coming "to demonſtration but this, I doubt we muſt be con- "tent without it." Which being nothing but a declaration of your doubt, is, I grant, a very ſhort way of proving any propoſition; and I ſhall leave to your lordſhip the ſatisfaction you have in ſuch a proof, ſince I think it will ſcarce convince others.

In the laſt place, your lordſhip argues, that becauſe I ſay, that the idea in the mind proves not the exiſtence of that thing whereof it is an idea, therefore we cannot know the actual exiſtence of any thing by our ſenſes: becauſe we know nothing, but by the perceived agreement of ideas. But if you had been pleaſed to have conſidered my anſwer there to the ſceptics, whoſe cauſe you here ſeem, with no ſmall vigour, to manage; you would, I humbly conceive, have found that you miſtake one thing for another, viz. the idea that has by a former ſenſation been lodged in the mind, for actually receiving any idea, i. e. actual ſenſation; which, I think, I need not go about to prove are two diſtinct things, after what you have here quoted out of my book. Now the two ideas, that in this caſe are perceived to agree, and do thereby produce knowledge, are the idea of actual ſenſation (which is an action whereof I have a clear and diſtinct idea) and the idea of actual exiſtence of ſomething without me that cauſes that ſenſation. And what other certainty your lordſhip has by your ſenſes of the exiſting of any thing without you, but the perceived connexion of thoſe two ideas, I would gladly know. When you have deſtroyed this certainty, which I conceive is the utmoſt, as to this matter, which our infinitely wiſe and bountiful Maker has made us capable of in this ſtate; your lordſhip will have well aſſiſted the ſceptics in carrying their arguments againſt certainty by ſenſe, beyond what they could have expected.

I cannot but fear, my lord, that what you have ſaid here in favour of ſcepticiſm, againſt certainty by ſenſe (for

(for it is not at all againſt me, till you ſhow we can have no idea of actual ſenſation) without the proper antidote annexed, in ſhowing wherein that certainty conſiſts (if the account I give be not true) after you have ſo ſtrenuouſly endeavoured to deſtroy what I have ſaid for it; will, by your authority, have laid no ſmall foundation of ſcepticiſm: which they will not fail to lay hold of, with advantage to their cauſe, who have any diſpoſition that way. For I deſire any one to read this your fifth argument, and then judge which of us two is a promoter of ſcepticiſm; I who have endeavoured, and, as I think, proved certainty by our ſenſes; or your lordſhip, who has (in your thoughts at leaſt) deſtroyed theſe proofs, without giving us any other to ſupply their place. All your other arguments amount to no more but this, that I have given inſtances to ſhow, that the extent of our knowledge, in compariſon of the whole extent of being, is very little and narrow: which, when "your lordſhip "writ your Vindication of the doctrine of the Trinity, "were very fair and ingenuous confeſſions of the ſhort-"neſs of human underſtanding, with reſpect to the "nature and manner of ſuch things, which we are moſt "certain of the being of, by conſtant and undoubted "experience:" though ſince you have ſhowed your diſlike of them in more places than one, particularly p. 33. and again more at large p. 43. and at laſt you have thought fit to repreſent them as arguments for ſcepticiſm. And thus I have acquitted myſelf, I hope to your lordſhip's ſatisfaction, of my promiſe to anſwer your accuſation of a tendency to ſcepticiſm.

But to return to your ſecond letter, where I left off. In the following pages you have another argument "to "prove my way of certainty to be none, but to lead to "ſcepticiſm:" which, after a ſerious peruſal of it, ſeems to me to amount to no more but this, that Des Cartes and I go both in the way of ideas, and we differ; ergo, the placing of certainty in the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of ideas, is no way of certainty, but leads to ſcepticiſm; which is a conſequence I cannot admit, and I think is no better than this: your lordſhip and I differ, and yet we both go in the way of ideas; ergo, ergo, the placing of knowledge in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of ideas is no way of certainty at all, but leads to scepticism.

Your lordship will perhaps think I say more than I can justify, when I say your lordship goes in the way of ideas; for you will tell me, you do not place certainty in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of ideas. Answ. No more does Des Cartes; and therefore, in that respect, he and I went no more in the same way of ideas, than your lordship and I do. From whence it follows, that how much soever he and I may differ in other points, our difference is no more an argument against this proposition, that knowledge or certainty consists in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of ideas, than your lordship's and my difference in any other point, is an argument against the truth of that my definition of knowledge, or that it tends to scepticism.

But you will say, that Des Cartes built his system of philosophy upon ideas; and so I say does your lordship too, and every one else as much as he, that has any system of that or any other part of knowledge. For ideas are nothing but the immediate objects of our minds in thinking; and your lordship, I conclude, in building your system of any part of knowledge thinks on something; and therefore you can no more build, or have any system of knowledge without ideas, than you can think without some immediate objects of thinking. Indeed, you do not so often use the word ideas as Des Cartes or I have done; but using the things signified by that term as much as either of us (unless you can think without an immediate object of thinking) yours also is the way of ideas, as much as his or mine. Your condemning the way of ideas, in those general terms, which one meets with so often in your writings on this occasion, amounts at last to no more but an exception against a poor sound of three syllables, though your lordship thinks fit not to own, that you have any exception to it.

If, besides this, these ten or twelve pages have any other argument in them, which I have not seen, I humbly desire you would be pleased to put it into a syllogism, to convince my reader, that I have silently passed by an argu-argument of importance; and then I promiſe an anſwer to it: and the ſame requeſt and promiſe I make to your lordſhip, in reference to all other paſſages in your letter, wherein you think there is any thing of moment unanſwered.

Your lordſhip comes to anſwer what was in my former letter, to ſhow, that what you had ſaid concerning nature and perſon, was to me and ſeveral others, whom I had talked with about it, hardly to be underſtood. To this purpoſe the ſixteen next pages are chiefly employed to ſhow what Ariſtotle and others have ſaid about φύσις and natura, a Greek and a Latin word; neither of which is the Engliſh word nature, nor can concern it at all, till it be proved that nature in Engliſh has, in the propriety of our tongue, preciſely the ſame ſignification that φύσις had among the Greeks, and natura among the Romans. For would it not be pretty harſh to an Engliſh ear, to ſay with Ariſtotle, "that nature is a corpo-"real ſubſtance, or a corporeal ſubſtance is nature?" to inſtance but in this one, among thoſe many various ſenſes which your lordſhip proves he uſed the term φύσις in: or with Anaximander, "that nature is matter, or "matter nature?" or with Sextus Empiricus, "that "nature is a principle of life, or a principle of life is "nature?" So that though the philoſophers of old of all kinds did underſtand the ſenſe of the terms φύσις and natura, in the languages of their countries; yet it does not follow, what you would here conclude from thence, that they underſtood the proper ſignification of the term nature in Engliſh. Nor has an Engliſhman any more need to conſult thoſe Grecians in their uſe of the ſound φύσις, to know what nature ſignifies in Engliſh; than thoſe Grecians had need to conſult our writings, or bring inſtances of the uſe of the word nature in Engliſh authors, to juſtify their uſing of the term φύσις in any ſenſe they had uſed it in Greek. The like may be ſaid of what is brought out of the Greek chriſtian writers; for I think an Engliſhman could ſcarce be juſtified in ſaying in Engliſh, "that the angels were natures," becauſe Theodoret and St. Baſil call them φύσεις. To theſe, I think, there might be added other ſenſes, wherein the word word φύσις may be found, made use of by the Greeks, which are not taken notice of by your lordship: as particularly Aristotle, if I mistake not, uses it for a plastic power, or a kind of "anima mundi," presiding over the material world, and producing the order and regularity of motions, formations, and generations in it.

Indeed your lordship brings a proof from an authority that is proper in the case, and would go a great way in it; for it is of an Englishman, who, writing of nature, gives an account of the signification of the word nature in English. But the mischief is, that among eight significations of the word nature, which he gives, that is not to be found, which you quote him for, and had need of. For he says not that nature in English is used for substance; which is the sense your lordship has used it in, and would justify by the authority of that ingenious and honourable person: and to make it out, you tell us, "Mr. Boyle says the word essence is of great affinity "to nature, if not of an adequate import;" to which your lordship adds, "but the real essence of a thing is "a substance." So that, in fine, the authority of this excellent person and philosopher amounts to thus much, that he says that nature and essence are two terms that have a great affinity; and you say, that nature and substance are two terms that have a great affinity. For the learned Mr. Boyle says no such thing, nor can it appear that he ever thought so, till it can be shown, that he has said that essence and substance have the same signification.

I humbly conceive, it would have been a strange way in any body, but your lordship, to have quoted an author for saying that nature and substance had the same signification, when one of those terms, viz. substance, he does not, upon that occasion, so much as name. But your lordship has this privilege, it seems, to speak of your inferences as if they were other men's words, whereof I think I have given several instances; I am sure I have given one, where you seem to speak of clear and distinct ideas as my words, when they are only your words, there inferred from my words "evident knowledge:"

" ledge:" and other the like instances might be produced, were there any need.

Had your lordship produced Mr. Boyle's testimony, that nature, in our tongue, had the same signification with substance, I should presently have submitted to so great an authority, and taken it for proper English, and a clear way of expressing one's self, to use nature and substance promiscuously one for another. But since, I think, there is no instance of any one who ever did so, and therefore it must be a new, and consequently no very clear way of speaking; give me leave, my lord, to wonder, why in all this dispute about the term nature, upon the clear and right understanding whereof, you lay so much stress, you have not been pleased to define it: which would put an end to all disputes about the meaning of it, and leave no doubtfulness, no obscurity in your use of it, nor any room for any dispute what you mean by it. This would have saved many pages of paper, though perhaps it would have made us lose your learned account of what the ancients have said concerning φύσις, and the several acceptations they used it in.

All the other authors, Greek and Latin, your lordship has quoted, may, for aught I know, have used the term φύσις and natura, properly in their languages; and have discoursed very clearly and intelligibly about what those terms in their countries signified. But how that proves there were no difficulties in the sense or construction in that discourse of yours, concerning nature, which I, and those I consulted upon it, did not understand; is hard to see. Your lordship's discourse was obscure, and too difficult then for me, and so I must own it is still. Whether my friend be any better enlightened by what you have said to him here, out of so many antient authors, I am too remote from him at the writing of this to know, and so shall not trouble your lordship with any conversation, which perhaps, when we meet again, we may have upon it.

The next passage of your vindication, which was complained of to be very hard to be understood, was this, where you say, " that you grant that by sensation " and reflection we come to know the powers and pro-

" perties

" perties of things; but our reaſon is ſatisfied that there " muſt be ſomething beyond theſe, becauſe it is im- " poſſible they ſhould ſubſiſt by themſelves. So that " the nature of things properly belongs to our reaſon, " and not to mere ideas." To rectify the miſtake that had been made in my firſt letter, p. 157, in taking reaſon here to mean the faculty of reaſon, you tell me, " I might eaſily have ſeen, that by reaſon your lordſhip " underſtood principles of reaſon allowed by mankind." To which it was replied, that then this paſſage of yours muſt be read thus, viz. " that your lordſhip grants that " by ſenſation and reflexion we come to know the pro- " perties of things; but our reaſon, i. e. the principles " of reaſon allowed by mankind, are ſatisfied that there " muſt be ſomething beyond theſe; becauſe it is im- " poſſible they ſhould ſubſiſt by themſelves. So that " the nature of things properly belongs to our reaſon," i. e. to the principles of reaſon allowed by mankind, and not to mere ideas; " which made it ſeem more " unintelligible than it was before."

To the complaint was made of the unintelligibleneſs of this paſſage in this laſt ſenſe given by your lordſhip, you anſwer nothing. So that we [i. e. my friends whom I conſulted and I] are ſtill excuſable, if not underſtanding what is ſignified by theſe expreſſions: " the prin- " ciples of reaſon allowed by mankind are ſatisfied, " and the nature of things properly belongs to the " principles of reaſon allowed by mankind;" we ſee not the connexion of the propoſitions here tied together by the words " ſo that," which was the thing complained of in theſe words, viz. " the inference " here, both for its connexion and expreſſion ſeemed " hard to be underſtood;" and more to the ſame purpoſe, which your lordſhip takes no notice of.

Indeed your lordſhip repeats theſe words of mine, " that in both ſenſes of the word reaſon, either taken " for a faculty, or for the principles of reaſon allowed " by mankind, reaſon and ideas may conſiſt together:" and then ſubjoins, " that this leads your lordſhip to " the examination of that which may be of ſome uſe, " viz. to ſhow the difference of my method of cer- " tainty

" tainty by ideas, and the method of certainty by rea-
" ſon." Which how it any way juſtifies your oppoſing ideas and reaſon, as you here, and elſewhere often do; or ſhows, that ideas are inconſiſtent with the principles of reaſon allowed by mankind; I leave to the reader to judge. Your lordſhip, for the clearing of what you had ſaid in your Vindication, &c. from obſcurity and unintelligibleneſs, which were complained of in it, is to prove, that ideas are inconſiſtent with the principles of reaſon allowed by mankind; and in anſwer to this, you ſay, " you will ſhow the difference of my method " of certainty by ideas, and the method of certainty by
" reaſon."

My lord, as I remember, the expreſſion in queſtion was not, " that the nature of things properly belongs to
" our reaſon, and not to my method of certainty by " ideas; but this, that the nature of things belongs to " our reaſon, and not to mere ideas. So that the thing
" you were here to ſhow, was, that reaſon, i. e. the " principles of reaſon allowed by mankind, and ideas;
" and not the principles of reaſon, and my method of
" certainty by ideas, cannot conſiſt together:" for the principles of reaſon allowed by mankind, and ideas, may conſiſt together; though, perhaps, my method of certainty by ideas ſhould prove inconſiſtent with thoſe principles. So that if all that you ſay, from this to the 153d page, i. e. forty-eight pages, were as clear demonſtration, as I humbly conceive it is the contrary; yet it does nothing to clear the paſſage in hand, but leaves that part of your diſcourſe, concerning nature, lying ſtill under the objection was made againſt it, as much as if you had not ſaid one word.

But ſince I am not unwilling that my method of certainty ſhould be examined, and I ſhould be glad (if there be any faults in it) to learn the defects of that my definition of knowledge, from ſo great a maſter as your lordſhip; I will conſider what you here ſay, " to ſhow
" the difference of my method of certainty by ideas,
" and the method of certainty by reaſon."

Your lordſhip ſays, " that the way of certainty by
" reaſon lies in two things.

" 1. The certainty of principles.
" 2. The certainty of deductions."

I grant, that a part of that which is called certainty by reason, lies in the certainty of principles; which principles, I presume, your lordship and I are agreed, are several propositions.

If then these principles are propositions, to show the difference between your lordship's way of certainty by reason, and my way of certainty by ideas; I think it is visible, that you ought to show wherein the certainty of those propositions consists in your way by reason, different from that wherein I make it consist in my way by ideas. As for example, your lordship and I are agreed, that this proposition, whatsoever is, is; is a principle of reason, or a maxim. Now my way of certainty by ideas, is, that the certainty of this proposition consists in this, that there is a perceivable connexion or agreement between the idea of being and the idea of being, or between the idea of existence and the idea of existence, as is expressed in that proposition. But now, in your way of reason, pray wherein does the certainty of this proposition consist? If it be in any thing different from that perceivable agreement of the ideas, affirmed of one another in it, I beseech your lordship to tell me; if not, I beg leave to conclude, that your way of certainty by reason, and my way of certainty by ideas, in this case are just the same.

But instead of saying any thing, to show wherein the certainty of principles is different, in the way of reason, from the certainty of principles in the way of ideas, upon my friend's showing, that you had no ground to say as you did, that I had no idea of reason, as it stands for principles of reason; your lordship takes occasion (as, what will not, in a skilful hand, serve to introduce any thing one has a mind to?) to tell me, " what ideas " I have of them must appear from my book, and you " do there find a chapter of self-evident propositions " and maxims, which you cannot but think extraordi-
B. iv. c. 7. § 20. " nary for the design of it," which is thus " summed in the conclusion, viz. that it " was to show, that these maxims, as they " are

" are of little use, where we have clear and distinct " ideas, so they are of dangerous use, where our ideas " are not clear and distinct. And is not this a fair way " to convince your lordship, that my way of ideas is " very consistent with the certainty of reason, when the " way of reason hath been always supposed to proceed " upon general principles, and I assert them to be use- " less and dangerous ?"

In which words I crave leave to observe,

1. That the pronoun " them" here seems to have reference to self-evident propositions, to maxims, and to principles, as terms used by your lordship and me; though it be certain, that you and I use them in a far different sense; for, if I mistake not, you use them all three promiscuously one for another; whereas it is plain, that in that chapter, out of which you bring your quotations here, I distinguish self-evident propositions from those, which I there mention under the name of maxims, which are principally these two, " whatsoever is, is; and it is impossi- " ble for the same thing to be, and not to be." Farther it is plain, out of the same place, that by maxims I there mean general propositions, which are so universally received under the name of maxims or axioms, that they are looked upon as innate; the two chief whereof, principally there meant, are those abovementioned: but what the propositions are which you comprehend under maxims, or principles of reason, cannot be determined, since your lordship neither defines nor enumerates them; and so it is impossible, precisely, to know what you mean by " them" here: and that which makes me more at a loss, is, that in this argument, you set down for principles or maxims, propositions that are not self-evident, viz. this, " that " the essential properties of a man are to reason and " discourse," &c.

Essay, b. iv. c. 7.

2. I crave leave to observe, that you tell me, that in my book " you find a chapter of self-evident propositions " tions and maxims," whereas I find no such chapter in my book: I have in it indeed a chapter of maxims, but never an one intitled, " of self-evident propositions

" and maxims." This, it is poſſible, your lordſhip will call a nice criticiſm; but yet it is ſuch an one, as is very neceſſary in the caſe: for in that chapter I, as is before obſerved, expreſsly diſtinguiſh ſelf-evident propoſitions from the received maxims or axioms, which I there ſpeak of: whereas it ſeems to me to be your deſign (in joining them in a title of a chapter, contrary to what I had done) to have it thought, that I treated of them as one and the ſame thing; and ſo all that I ſaid there, of the uſeleſſneſs of ſome few general propoſitions, under the title of received maxims, might be applied to all ſelf-evident propoſitions; the quite contrary whereof was the deſign of that chapter. For that which I endeavour to ſhow there, is, that all our knowledge is not built on thoſe few received general propoſitions, which are ordinarily called maxims or axioms; but that there are a great many truths may be known without them: but that there is any knowledge, without ſelf-evident propoſitions, I am ſo far from denying, that I am accuſed by your lordſhip for requiring, in demonſtration, more ſuch than you think are neceſſary. This ſeems, I ſay, to be your deſign; and I wiſh your lordſhip, by entitling my chapter, as I myſelf did, and not as it would beſt ſerve your turn, had not made it neceſſary for me to make this nice criticiſm. This is certain, that without thus confounding maxims and ſelf-evident propoſitions, what you here ſay would not ſo much, as in appearance, concern me: for,

3. I crave leave to obſerve, that all the argument your lordſhip uſes here againſt me to prove, that my way of certainty by ideas is inconſiſtent with " the way " of certainty by reaſon, which lies in the certainty of " principles, is this, that the way of reaſon hath been " always ſuppoſed to proceed upon general principles, " and I aſſert them to be uſeleſs and dangerous." Be pleaſed, my lord, to define or enumerate your general principles, and then we ſhall ſee whether I aſſert them to be uſeleſs and dangerous, and whether they, who ſuppoſed the way of reaſon was to proceed upon general principles, differed from me; and if they did differ, whether theirs was more the way of reaſon than mine: but but to talk thus of general principles, which have always been supposed the way of reason, without telling so much as which, or what they are, is not so much as by authority to show, that my way of certainty by ideas is inconsistent with the way of certainty by reason; much less is it in reality to prove it. Because admitting I had said any thing contrary to what, as you say, has been always supposed, its being supposed, proves it not to be true; because we know that several things have been for many ages generally supposed, which at last, upon examination, have been found not to be true.

What hath been always supposed, is fit only for your lordship's great reading to declare: but such arguments, I confess, are wholly lost upon me, who have not time or occasion to examine what has always been supposed; especially in those questions which concern truths, that are to be known from the nature of things: because, I think, they cannot be established by majority of votes, not easy to be collected; nor if they were collected, can convey certainty till it can be supposed, that the greater part of mankind are always in the right. In matters of fact, I own we must govern ourselves by the testimonies of others; but in matters of speculation, to suppose on, as others have supposed before us, is supposed by many to be only a way to learned ignorance, which enables to talk much, and know but little. The truths, which the penetration and labours of others before us have discovered and made out, I own we are infinitely indebted to them for; and some of them are of that consequence, that we cannot acknowledge too much the advantages we receive from those great masters in knowledge: but where they only supposed, they left it to us to search, and advance farther. And in those things, I think, it becomes our industry to employ itself, for the improvement of the knowledge, and adding to the stock of discoveries left us by our inquisitive and thinking predecessors.

4. One thing more I crave leave to observe, viz. that to these words, "these maxims, as they are of little use "where we have clear and distinct ideas, so they are of "dangerous use where our ideas are not clear and

" distinct," quoted out of my Essay; you subjoin, " and is not this a fair way to convince your lordship, " that my way of ideas is very consistent with the cer- " tainty of reason?" Answ. My lord, my Essay, and those words in it, were writ many years before I dreamt that you or any body else would ever question the consistency of my way of certainty by ideas, with the way of certainty by reason; and so could not be intended to convince your lordship in this point: and since you first said, that these two ways are inconsistent, I never brought those words to convince you, " that my way " is consistent with the certainty of reason;" and therefore why you ask, whether that be a fair way to convince you, which was never made use of as any way to convince you of any such thing, is hard to imagine.

But your lordship goes on in the following words with the like kind of argument, where you tell me that I say, " that my first design is to prove, " that the consideration of those general " maxims adds nothing to the evidence or " certainty of knowledge; which, says your lordship, " overthrows all that which hath been accounted science " and demonstration, and must lay the foundation of " scepticism; because our true grounds of certainty de- " pend upon some general principles of reason. To " make this plain, you say, you will put a case grounded " upon my words; which are, that I have discoursed " with very rational men, who have actually denied " that they are men. These words J. S. understands " as spoken of themselves, and charges them with very " ill consequences; but you think they are capable of " another meaning: however, says your lordship, let " us put the case, that men did in earnest question, " whether they were men or not; and then you do not " see, if I set aside general maxims, how I can con- " vince them that they are men. For the way your " lordship looks on as most apt to prevail upon such " extraordinary sceptical men, is by general maxims " and principles of reason."

Essay, b. iv. c. 7. §. 4.

Answ. I can neither in that paragraph nor chapter find that I say, " that my first design is to prove, that " these

" these general maxims" [i. e. those which your lordship calls general principles of reason] add nothing to the evidence and certainty of knowledge in general: for so these words must be understood, to make good the consequence which your lordship charges on them, viz. " that they overthrow all that has been accounted science " and demonstration, and lay the foundations of scep- " ticism."

What my design in that place is, is evident from these words in the foregoing paragraph: " let us consider " whether this self-evidence be peculiar " only to those propositions, which are re- " ceived for maxims, and have the dignity " of axioms allowed: and here it is plain, that several " other truths, not allowed to be axioms, partake " equally with them in this self-evidence." Which shows that my design there, was to evince that there were truths that are not called maxims, that are as self-evident as those received maxims. Pursuant to this design, I say, " that the consideration of these " axioms" [i. e. whatsoever is, is; and it is impossible for the same thing to be, and not to be] " can " add nothing to the evidence and certainty of its [i. e. " the mind's] knowledge;" [i. e. of the truth of more particular propositions concerning identity.] These are my words in that place, and that the sense of them is according to the limitation annexed to them between those crotchets, I refer my reader to that fourth section; where he will find that all that I say amounts to no more but what is expressed in these words, in the close of it: " I appeal to every one's own mind, whether this pro- " position, a circle is a circle, be not as self-evident a " proposition, as that consisting of more general terms, " whatsoever is, is: and again, whether this proposi- " tion, blue is not red, be not a proposition that the " mind can no more doubt of, as soon as it understands " the words, than it does of that axiom, it is impossible " for the same thing to be, and not to be: and so of all " the like." And now I ask your lordship, whether you do affirm of this, " that it overthrows all that " which hath been counted science and demonstration,

Essay, b. iv. c. 7. § 3.

§ 4.

" and muſt lay the foundation of ſcepticiſm?" If you do, I ſhall deſire you to prove it; if you do not, I muſt deſire you to conſider how fairly my ſenſe has been repreſented.

But ſuppoſing you had repreſented my ſenſe right, and that the little or dangerous uſe which I there limit to certain maxims, had been meant of all principles of reaſon in general, in your ſenſe; what had this been, my lord, to the queſtion under debate? Your lordſhip undertakes to ſhow, that your way of certainty by reaſon is different from my way of certainty by ideas. To do this, you ſay in the preceding page, " that certainty " by reaſon lies, 1. in certainty of principles; 2. in " certainty of deductions." The firſt of theſe you are upon here; and if in order to what you had undertaken, your lordſhip had ſhown, that in your way by reaſon, thoſe principles were certain; but in my way by ideas, we could not attain to any certainty concerning them: this indeed had been to ſhow a difference between my way of certainty, which you call the way by ideas; and yours, which you call the way by reaſon; in this part of certainty, that lies in the certainty of principles. I have ſaid in the words quoted by your lordſhip, that the conſideration of thoſe two maxims, " what is, is; and " it is impoſſible for the ſame thing to be, and not to " be;" are not of uſe to add any thing to the evidence or certainty of our knowledge of the truth of identical predications; but I never ſaid thoſe maxims were in the leaſt uncertain: I may perhaps think otherwiſe of their uſe than your lordſhip does, but I think no otherwiſe of their truth and certainty than you do; they are left in their full force and certainty for your uſe, if you can make any better uſe of them, than what I think can be made. So that in reſpect of the allowed certainty of thoſe principles, my way differs not at all from your lordſhip's.

Pray, my lord, look over that chapter again, and ſee whether I bring their truth and certainty any more into queſtion, than you yourſelf do; and it is about their certainty, and not uſe, that the queſtion here is between your lordſhip and me: we both agree, that they are both undoubtedly certain; all then that you bring in the following pages about their uſe, is nothing to the preſent queſtion about the certainty of principles, which your lordſhip is upon in this place: and you will prove, that your way of certainty by reaſon is different from my way of certainty by ideas; when you can ſhow, that you are certain of the truth of thoſe, or any other maxims, any otherwiſe than by the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of ideas as expreſſed in them.

un-

But your lordſhip paſſing by that wholly, endeavours to prove, that my ſaying, that the conſideration of thoſe two general maxims can add nothing to the evidence and certainty of knowledge in identical predications, (for that is all that I there ſay) "overthrows all that has "been accounted ſcience and demonſtration, and muſt "lay the foundation of ſcepticiſm;" and it is by a very remarkable proof, viz. "becauſe our true grounds of "certainty depend upon ſome general principles of "reaſon:" which is the very thing I there not only deny, but have diſproved; and therefore ſhould not, I humbly conceive, have been reſted on as a proof of any thing elſe, till my arguments againſt it had been anſwered.

But inſtead of that, your lordſhip ſays, you will put a caſe that ſhall make it plain; which is the buſineſs of the ſix following pages, which are ſpent in this caſe.

The caſe is founded upon a ſuppoſition, which you ſeem willing to have thought that you borrowed either from J. S. or from me: whereas truly that ſuppoſition is neither that gentleman's nor mine, but purely your lordſhip's own. For however groſly Mr. J. S. has miſtaken (which he has ſince acknowledged in print) the obvious ſenſe of thoſe words of my Eſſay, on which you ſay you ground your caſe; yet I muſt do him right herein, that he himſelf ſuppoſed not, that any man in his wits ever in earneſt queſtioned whether he himſelf were a man or no: though by a miſtake (which I cannot but wonder at, in one ſo much exerciſed in controverſy as Mr. J. S.) he charged me with ſaying it. B. iv. c. 7. § 17.

Your lordſhip indeed ſays, "that you think my words "there may have another meaning." Would you thereby inſinuate, that you think it poſſible they ſhould have that meaning which J. S. once gave them? If you do not, my lord, Mr. J. S. and his underſtanding them ſo, is in vain brought in here to countenance your making ſuch a ſuppoſition. If you do think thoſe words of my Eſſay capable of ſuch a meaning as J. S. gave them, there will appear a ſtrange harmony between your lordſhip's and Mr. J. S's underſtanding, when he miſtakes what is ſaid in my book; whether it will continue, now Mr. J. S. takes me right, I know not: but let us come to the caſe as you put it. Your words are,

"Let us put the caſe, that men did in earneſt queſ-"tion whether they were men or not. Your lordſhip "ſays, you do not then ſee, if I ſet aſide general max-"ims, how I can convince them that they are men." Anſw. And do you, my lord, ſee that with maxims you can convince them of that or any thing elſe? I confeſs, whatever you ſhould do, I ſhould think it ſcarce worth while to reaſon with them about any thing. I believe you are the firſt that ever ſuppoſed a man ſo much beſide himſelf, as to queſtion whether he were a man or no, and yet ſo rational as to be thought capable of being convinced of that or any thing by diſcourſe of reaſon. This, methinks, is little different from ſuppoſing a man in and out of his wits at the ſame time.

But let us ſuppoſe your lordſhip ſo lucky with your maxims, that you do convince a man (that doubts of it) that he is a man; what proof, I beſeech you, my lord, is that of this propoſition, "that our true grounds of "certainty depend upon ſome general principles of "reaſon?"

On the contrary, ſuppoſe it ſhould happen, as is the more likely, that your ſetting upon him with your maxims cannot convince him; are we not by this your caſe to take this for a proof, "that general principles of "reaſon are not the grounds of certainty?" For it is upon the ſucceſs, or not ſucceſs of your endeavours to convince ſuch a man with maxims, that your lordſhip puts the proof of this propoſition, "that our true grounds " grounds of certainty depend upon general principles of " reaſon;" the iſſue whereof muſt remain in ſuſpence, till you have found ſuch a man to bring it to trial: and ſo the proof is far enough off, unleſs you think the caſe ſo plain, that every one ſees ſuch a man will be preſently convinced by your maxims, though I ſhould think it probable that moſt people may think he will not.

Your lordſhip adds, " for the way you look on, as " moſt apt to prevail upon ſuch extraordinary ſceptical " men, is by general maxims and principles of reaſon." Anſw. This indeed is a reaſon why your lordſhip ſhould uſe maxims, when you have to do with ſuch extraordinary ſceptical men; becauſe you look on it as the likelieſt way to prevail. But pray, my lord, is your looking on it as the beſt way to prevail on ſuch extraordinary ſceptical men, any proof, " that our true grounds of " certainty depend upon ſome general principles of " reaſon?" for it was to make this plain, that this caſe was put.

Farther, my lord, give me leave to aſk, what we have here to do with the ways of convincing others of what they do not know or aſſent to? Your lordſhip and I are not, as I think, diſputing of the methods of perſuading others of what they are ignorant of, and do not yet aſſent to; but our debate here is about the ground of certainty, in what they do know and aſſent to.

However, you go on to ſet down ſeveral maxims, which you look on as moſt apt to prevail upon your extraordinary ſceptical man, to convince him that he exiſts, and that he is a man. The maxims are,

" That nothing can have no operation.

" That all different ſorts of being are diſtinguiſhed " by eſſential properties.

" That the eſſential properties of a man, are to rea- " ſon, diſcourſe, &c.

" That theſe properties cannot ſubſiſt by themſelves, " without a real ſubſtance."

I will not queſtion whether a man cannot know that he exiſts, or be certain (for it is of knowledge and certainty the queſtion here is) that he is a man without the help of theſe maxims. I will only crave leave to aſk,

how

how you know that these are maxims? For methinks this, "that the essential properties of a man are to reason, "discourse, &c." an imperfect proposition, "and so "forth" at the end of it, is a pretty sort of maxim. That therefore which I desire to be informed here, is, how your lordship knows these, or any other propositions to be maxims; and how propositions, that are maxims, are to be distinguished from propositions that are not maxims? and the reason why I insist upon it, is this: because this, and this only, would show, whether what I have said in my chapter about maxims, "over-"throws all that has been accounted science and de-"monstration, and lays the foundation of scepticism." But I fear my request, that you would be pleased to tell me, what you mean by maxims, that I may know what propositions, according to your lordship, are, and what are not maxims; will not be easily granted me: because it would presently put an end to all that you impute to me, as said in that chapter against maxims, in a sense that I use not the word there.

Your lordship makes me, out of my book, answer to the use you make of the four above-mentioned propositions, which you call maxims, as if I were declared of an opinion, that maxims could not be of any use in arguing with others: which methinks you should not have done, if you had considered my chapter of maxims, which you so often quote. For I there say, "max-

Essay, b. iv. c. 7. § 11.

"ims are useful to stop the mouths of "wranglers——to show, that wrong opi-"nions lead to absurdities, &c."

Your lordship nevertheless goes on to prove, "that "without the help of these principles or maxims, I "cannot prove to any that doubt it, that they are men, "in my way of ideas." Answ. I beseech you, my lord, to give me leave to mind you again, that the question is not what I can prove; but whether, in my way by ideas, I cannot without the help of these principles know that I am a man; and be certain of the truth of that, and several other propositions: I say, of several other propositions; for I do not think you, in your way of certainty by reason, pretend to be certain of all truths; or to be able to prove (to those who doubt) all propositions, or so much as be able to convince every one of every proposition, that you yourself are certain of. There be many propositions in Mr. Newton's excellent book, which there are thousands of people, and those a little more rational than such as should deny themselves to be men, whom Mr. Newton himself would not be able, with or without the use of maxims used in mathematics, to convince of the truth of: and yet this would be no argument against his method of certainty, whereby he came to the knowledge that they are true. What therefore you can conclude, as to my way of certainty, from a supposition of my not being able, in my way by ideas, to convince those who doubt of it, that they are men, I do not see. But your lordship is resolved to prove that I cannot, and so you go on.

or

Your lordship says, that "I suppose that we must "have a clear and distinct idea of that we are certain "of; and this you prove out of my chapter of maxims, where I say, "that every one knows the ideas that he "has, and that distinctly and unconfusedly one from "another." Answ. I suspected all along, that you mistook what I meant by confused ideas. If your lordship pleases to turn to my chapter of distinct and confused ideas, you will there find, that an idea, which is distinguished in the mind from all others, may yet be confused: the confusion being made by a careless application of distinct names to ideas, that are not sufficiently distinct. Which having explained at large, in that chapter, I shall not need here again to repeat. Only permit me to set down an instance: he that has the idea of the liquor that, circulating through the heart of a sheep, keeps that animal alive, and he that has the idea of the liquor that circulates through the heart of a lobster, has two different ideas; as distinct as an idea of an aqueous, pellucid, cold liquor, is from the idea of a red, opake, hot liquor: but yet these two may be confounded, by giving the name blood to this vital circulating liquor of a lobster.

Essay, b. ii. c. 29. § 4, 5, 6.

This being considered, will show how what I have said there may consist with my saying, that to certainty ideas ideas are not required, that are in all their parts perfectly clear and diſtinct: becauſe certainty being ſpoken there of the knowledge of the truth of any propoſition, and propoſitions being made in words, it may be true, that notwithſtanding all the ideas we have in our minds, are, as far as we have them there, clear and diſtinct; yet thoſe which we would ſuppoſe the terms in the propoſition to ſtand for, may not be clear and diſtinct: either,

1. By making the term ſtand for an uncertain idea, which we have not yet preciſely determined in our minds, whereby it comes to ſtand ſometimes for one idea, ſometimes for another. Which though, when we reflect on them, they are diſtinct in our minds, yet by this uſe of a name undetermined in its ſignification, come to be confounded. Or,

2. By ſuppoſing the name to ſtand for ſomething more than really is in the idea in our minds, which we make it a ſign of, v. g. let us ſuppoſe, that a man many years ſince, when he was young, eat a fruit, whoſe ſhape, ſize, conſiſtency, and colour, he has a perfect remembrance of; but the particular taſte he has forgot, and only remembers, that it very much delighted him. This complex idea, as far as it is in his mind, it is evident, is there; and as far as he perceives it, when he reflects on it, is in all parts clear and diſtinct: but when he calls it a pine-apple, and will ſuppoſe, that name ſtands for the ſame preciſe complex idea, for which another man (who newly eat of that fruit, and has the idea of the taſte of it alſo freſh in his mind) uſes it, or for which he himſelf uſed it, when he had the taſte freſh in his memory; it is plain his complex idea in that part, which conſiſts in the taſte, is very obſcure.

To apply this to what your lordſhip here makes me ſuppoſe, I anſwer,

1. I do not ſuppoſe, that to certainty it is requiſite, that an idea ſhould be in all its parts clear and diſtinct. I can be certain, that a pine-apple is not an artichoke, though my idea, which I ſuppoſe that name to ſtand for, be in me obſcure and confuſed, in regard of its taſte.

2. I do not deny, but on the contrary I affirm, that I can have a clear and diſtinct idea of a man (i. e. the idea idea I give the name man to, may be clear and distinct) though it should be true, that men are not yet agreed on the determined idea, that the name man shall stand for. Whatever confusion there may be in the idea, to which that name is indeterminately applied; I do allow and affirm, that every one, if he pleases, may have a clear and distinct idea of a man to himself, i. e. which he makes the word man stand for: which, if he makes known to others in his discourse with them about man, all verbal dispute will cease, and he cannot be mistaken when he uses the term man. And if this were but done with most of the glittering terms brandished in disputes, it would often be seen how little some men have to say, who with equivocal words and expressions make no small noise in controversy.

Your lordship concludes this part, by saying, "thus "you have showed how inconsistent my way of ideas is "with true certainty, and of what use and necessity "these general principles of reason are." Answ. By the laws of disputation, which in another place you express such a regard to, one is bound not to change the terms of the question. This I crave leave humbly to offer to your lordship, because, as far as I have looked into controversy, I do not remember to have met with any one so apt, shall I say, to forget or change the question as your lordship. This, my lord, I should not venture to say, but upon very good grounds, which I shall be ready to give you an account of, whenever you shall demand it of me. One example of it we have here: you say, "you have showed how inconsistent my way of "ideas is with true certainty, and of what use and ne-"cessity these general principles of reason are." My lord, if you please to look back to the 105th page, you will see what you there promised was "to show the dif-"ference of my method of certainty by ideas, and the "method of certainty by reason:" and particularly in the pages between that and this, the certainty of principles, which you say is one of those two things, wherein the way of certainty by reason lies. Instead of that, your lordship concludes here, that you have showed two things:

"1. How

" 1. How inconsistent my way of ideas is with true " certainty." Whereas it should be " to show the in- " consistency or difference of my method of certainty " by ideas, and the method of certainty by reason;" which are two very different propositions. And before you undertake to show, that my method of certainty is inconsistent with true certainty; it will be necessary for you to define, and tell us wherein true certainty consists, which your lordship has shown no great forwardness to do.

2. Another thing which you say you have done, is, " that you have shown of what use and necessity these " general principles of reason are." Ans. Whether by these general principles you mean those propositions which you set down, page 108, and call there maxims, or any other propositions which you have not any where set down, I cannot tell. But whatsoever they are, that you mean here by " these," I know not how the usefulness of these your general principles, be they what they will, came to be a question between your lordship and me here. If you have a mind to show any mistakes of mine in my chapter of maxims, which, you say, you think extraordinary for the design of it, I shall not be unwilling to be rectified; but that the usefulness of principles is not what is here under debate between us, I, with submission, affirm. That which your lordship is here to prove, is, that the certainty of principles, which is the way of certainty by reason, is different from my way of certainty by ideas. Upon the whole, I crave leave to say in your words, that, " thus I have," I humbly conceive, made it appear, that you have not " showed any difference, much less any inconsistency of " my method of certainty by ideas, and the method of " certainty by reason," in that first part, which you assign of certainty by reason, viz. certainty of principles.

I come now to the second part, which you assign of certainty by reason, viz. certainty of deductions. I only crave leave first to set down these words in the latter end of your discourse, which we have been considering, where your lordship says, " you begin to think J. S. " was in the right, when he made me say, That I had

" dis-

" discoursed with very rational men who denied them" selves to be men." Answ. I do not know what may be done by those who have such a command over the pronouns " they" and " them," as to put " they them" selves" for " they." I shall therefore desire my reader to turn to that passage of my book, and see whether he too can be so lucky as your lordship, and can with you begin to think, that by these words, " who " have actually denied, that they, i. e. in" fants and changelings, are men; I meant, who actually denied that they themselves were men.

Essay, b. iv. c. 7. § 17.

Your lordship, to prove my method of certainty by ideas to be different from, and inconsistent with, your second part of the certainty by reason, which, you say, lies in the certainty of deductions, begins thus: " that " you come now to the certainty of reason, in making " deductions; and here you shall briefly lay down the " grounds of certainty, which the ancient philosophers
" went upon, and then compare my way of ideas with " them." To which give me leave, my lord, to reply:

(1.) That I humbly conceive, it should have been grounds of certainty [in making deductions] which the ancient philosophers went upon; or else they will be nothing to the proposition, which your lordship has undertaken here to prove. Now of the certainty in making deductions, I see none of the ancients produced by your lordship, who say any thing to show, wherein it consists, but Aristotle; who, as you say, " in his me" thod of inferring one thing from another, went upon
" this common principle of reason, that what things
" agree in a third, agree among themselves." And it so falls out, that so far as he goes towards the showing wherein the certainty of deductions consists, he and I agree, as is evident by what I say in my Essay. And if Aristotle had gone any farther to show, how we are certain, that those two things agree with a third, he would have placed that certainty in the perception of that agreement, as I have done, and then he and I should have perfectly agreed. I presume to say, if Aristotle had gone farther in this matter, he would have placed our knowledge or cer-certainty of the agreement of any two things in the perception of their agreement. And let not any one from hence think I attribute too much to myself in saying, that that acute and judicious philosopher, if he had gone farther in that matter, would have done as I have done. For if he omitted it, I imagine it was not that he did not see it, but that it was so obvious and evident, that it appeared superfluous to name it. For who can doubt that the knowledge, or being certain, that any two things agree, consists in the perception of their agreement? What else can it possibly consist in? It is so obvious, that it would be a little extraordinary to think, that he that went so far could miss it. And I should wonder, if any one should allow the certainty of deduction to consist in the agreement of two things in a third, and yet should deny that the knowledge or certainty of that agreement consisted in the perception of it.

B. iv. c. 2. § 2. & c. 17. § 15.

(2.) In the next place, my lord, supposing my method of certainty, in making deductions, were different from those of the ancients; this, at best, would be only that which I call "argumentum ad verecundiam;" which proves not on which side reason is, though I, in modesty, should answer nothing to their authorities.

Essay, b. iv. c. 17. § 19.

(3.) The ancients, as it seems by your lordship, not agreeing one among another about the grounds of certainty; what can their authorities signify in the case? or, how will it appear, that I differ from reason, in differing from any of them, more than that they differ from reason, in differing one from another? And therefore, after all the different authorities produced by you out of your great measure of reading, the matter will at last reduce itself to this point, that your lordship should tell us wherein the certainty of reason, in making deductions, consists; and then show wherein my method of making deductions differs from it: which, whether you have done or no, we shall see in what follows.

Your lordship closes your very learned, and to other purposes very useful, account of the opinions of the ancients, concerning certainty, with these words: "that "thus you have, in as few words as you could, laid "toge-

" together those old methods of certainty, which have " obtained greatest reputation in the world." Whereupon I must crave leave to mind you again, that the proposition you are here upon, and have undertaken to prove in this place, is concerning the certainty of deductions, and not concerning certainty in general. I say not this, that I am willing to decline the examination of my method of certainty in general, any way, or in any place: but I say it to observe, that in discourses of this nature, the laws of disputation have wisely ordered the proposition under debate to be kept to, and that in the same terms, to avoid wandering, obscurity, and confusion.

I therefore proceed now to consider what use your lordship makes of the ancients, against my way of certainty in general; since you think fit to make no use of them, as to the certainty of reason in making deductions: though it is under this your second branch of certainty by reason, that you bring them in.

Your first objection here, is that old one again, that my way of certainty by ideas is new. Answ. Your calling of it new, does not prove it to be different from that of reason: but your lordship proves it to be new,

" 1. Because here [i. e. in my way] we have no " general principles." Answ. I do, as your lordship knows, own the truth and certainty of the received general maxims; and I contend for the usefulness and necessity of self-evident propositions in all certainty, whether of institution or demonstration. What therefore those general principles are, which you have not in my way of certainty by ideas, which your lordship has in your way of certainty by reason, I beseech you to tell me, and thereby to make good this assertion against me.

2. Your lordship says, " that here [i. e. in my way] " we have no antecedents and consequents, no syllo- " gistical methods of demonstration." Answ. If your lordship here means, that there be no antecedents and consequents in my book, or that I speak not, or allow not of syllogism as a form of argumentation, that has its use, I humbly conceive the contrary is plain. But if by "here we have no antecedents and conſequents, "no ſyllogiſtical methods of demonſtration," you mean, that I do not place certainty, in having antecedents and conſequents, or in making of ſyllogiſms, I grant I do not; I have ſaid ſyllogiſms, inſtead of your words, ſyllogiſtical methods of demonſtration; which examined, amount here to no more than ſyllogiſms; for ſyllogiſtical methods are nothing but mode and figure, i. e. ſyllogiſms; and the rules of ſyllogiſms are the ſame, whether the ſyllogiſms be uſed in demonſtration or in probability. But it was convenient for you to ſay, "ſyllo- "giſtical methods of demonſtration," if you would have it thought, that certainty is placed in it: for to have named bare ſyllogiſm, without annexing demonſtration to it, would have ſpoiled all, ſince every one, who knows what ſyllogiſm is, knows it may as well be uſed in topical or fallacious arguments, as in demonſtration.

Your lordſhip charges me then, that in my way of ideas I do not place certainty in having antecedents and conſequents. And pray, my lord, do you in your way by reaſon do ſo? If you do, this is certain that every body has, or may have certainty in every thing he diſcourſes about: for every one, in any diſcourſe he makes, has, or may, if he pleaſes, have antecedents and conſequents.

Again, your lordſhip charges me, that I do not place certainty in ſyllogiſm; I crave leave to aſk again, and does your lordſhip? And is this the difference between your way of certainty by reaſon, and my way of certainty by ideas? Why elſe is it objected to me, that I do not, if your lordſhip does not place certainty in ſyllogiſm? And if you do, I know nothing ſo requiſite, as that you ſhould adviſe all people, women and all, to betake themſelves immediately to the univerſities, and to the learning of logic, to put themſelves out of the dangerous ſtate of ſcepticiſm: for there young lads, by being taught ſyllogiſm, arrive at certainty; whereas, without mode and figure, the world is in perfect ignorance and uncertainty, and is ſure of nothing. The merchant cannot be certain that his account is right caſt up, nor the lady that her coach is not a wheel-barrow, nor her dairy-maid that one and one pound of butter, are two pounds of butter, and two and two four; and all for want of mode and figure: nay, according to this rule, whoever lived before Aristotle, or him, whoever it was, that first introduced syllogism, could not be certain of any thing; no, not that there was a God, which will be the present state of the far greatest part of mankind (to pass by whole nations of the east, as China and Indostan, &c.) even in the christian world, who to this day have not the syllogistical methods of demonstration, and so cannot be certain of any thing.

that

3. Your lordship farther says, that "in my way of "certainty by ideas we have no criterion." Answ. To perceive the agreement or disagreement of two ideas, and not to perceive the agreement or disagreement of two ideas, is, I think, a criterion to distinguish what a man is certain of, from what he is not certain of. Has your lordship any other or better criterion to distinguish certainty from uncertainty? If you have, I repeat again my earnest request, that you would be pleased to do that right to your way of certainty by reason, as not to conceal it. If your lordship has not, why is the want of a criterion, when I have so plain a one, objected to my way of certainty, and my way so often accused of a tendency to scepticism and infidelity, when you yourself have not a better? And I think I may take the liberty to say, if yours be not the same, you have not so good.

Perhaps your lordship will censure me here, and think it is more than becomes me, to press you so hard concerning your own way; and to ask, whether your way of certainty lies in having antecedents and consequents, and syllogisms; and whether it has any other or better criterion, than what I have given: your lordship will possibly think it enough, that "you have laid down the "grounds of certainty which the ancient Grecians went "upon." My lord, if you think so, I must be satisfied with it: though perhaps others will think it strange, that in a dispute about a method of certainty, which, for its supposed coming short of certainty, you charge with a tendency to scepticism and infidelity, you should produce only the different opinions of other men concerning certainty, to make good this charge, without declaring any of thoſe different opinions or grounds of certainty to be true or falſe: and ſome may be apt to ſuſpect that you yourſelf are not yet reſolved wherein to place it.

But, my lord, I know too well what your diſtance above me requires of me, to ſay any ſuch thing to your lordſhip. Your own opinions are to yourſelf, and your not diſcovering them muſt paſs for a ſufficient reaſon for your not diſcovering them: and if you think fit to overlay a poor infant modern notion with the great and weighty names of Pythagoras, Plato, Ariſtotle, Plutarch, and the like; and heaps of quotations out of the ancients; who is not preſently to think it dead, and that there is an end of it? Eſpecially when it will have too much envy for any one to open his mouth in defence of a notion, which is declared by your lordſhip to be different from what thoſe great men ſaid, whoſe words are to be taken without any more ado, and who are not to be thought ignorant or miſtaken in any thing. Though I crave leave to ſay, that however infallible oracles they were, to take things barely upon their, or any man's authority, is barely to believe, but not to know or be certain.

Thus your lordſhip has ſufficiently proved my way of certainty by ideas to be inconſiſtent with the way of certainty by reaſon, by proving it new; which you prove only by ſaying, that "it is ſo wholly new, that here we "have no general principles; no criterion; no ante-"cedents and conſequents; no ſyllogiſtical methods of "demonſtration: and yet we are told of a better way "of certainty to be attained merely by the help of "ideas;" add, if your lordſhip pleaſes, ſignified by words: which put into propoſitions, whereof ſome are general principles, ſome are or may be antecedents, and ſome conſequents, and ſome put together in mode and figure, ſyllogiſtical methods of demonſtration. For, pray my lord, may not words, that ſtand for ideas, be put into propoſitions, as well as any other? And may not thoſe propoſitions, wherein the terms ſtand for ideas, be be as well put into antecedents and conſequents, or ſyllogiſms, and make maxims, as well as any other propoſitions, whoſe terms ſtand not for ideas, if your lordſhip can find any ſuch? And if thus ideas can be brought into maxims, antecedents and conſequents, and ſyllogiſtical methods of demonſtration, what inconſiſtency has the way of certainty by ideas, with thoſe ways of certainty by reaſon, if at laſt your lordſhip will ſay, that certainty conſiſts in propoſitions put together as antecedents and conſequents, and in mode and figure? For as for principles or maxims, we ſhall know whether your principles and maxims are a way to certainty, when you ſhall pleaſe to tell us what it is, that to your lordſhip makes a maxim or principle, and diſtinguiſhes it from other propoſitions; and whether it be any thing but an immediate perception of the agreement or diſagreement of the ideas, as expreſſed in that propoſition. To conclude, by all that your lordſhip has alleged out of the ancients, you have not, as I humbly conceive, proved that my way of certainty is new, or that they had any way of certainty different from mine; much leſs have you proved that my way of certainty by ideas is inconſiſtent with the way of certainty by reaſon, which was the propoſition to be proved.

Your lordſhip having thought it enough againſt my way of certainty by ideas, thus to prove its newneſs, you betake yourſelf preſently to your old topic of obſcure and confuſed ideas; and aſk, "but how comes "there to be ſuch a way of certainty by ideas, and yet "the ideas themſelves are ſo uncertain and obſcure?" Anſw. No idea, as it is in the mind, is uncertain; though to thoſe who uſe names uncertainly, it may be uncertain what idea that name ſtands for. And as to obſcure and confuſed ideas, no idea is ſo obſcure in all its parts, or ſo confounded with all other ideas, but that one, who, in a propoſition, joins it with another in that part which is clear and diſtinct, may perceive its agreement or diſagreement, as expreſſed in that propoſition: though when names are uſed for ideas, which are in ſome part obſcure or confounded with other ideas, there can be no propoſitions made which can produce certainty concerning that, wherein the idea is obſcure and confuſed. And therefore to your lordſhip's queſtion, " how " is it poſſible for us to have a clear perception of the " agreement of ideas, if the ideas themſelves be not " clear and diſtinct?" I anſwer, very well; becauſe an obſcure or confuſed idea, i. e. that is not perfectly clear and diſtinct in all its parts, may be compared with another in that part of it, which is clear and diſtinct: which will, I humbly conceive, remove all thoſe difficulties, inconſiſtencies, and contradictions, which your lordſhip ſeems to be troubled with, from my words quoted in thoſe pages.

Your lordſhip having, as it ſeems, quite forgot that you were to ſhow wherein the certainty of deductions, in the way of ideas, was inconſiſtent with the certainty of deductions, in the way of reaſon, brings here a new charge upon my way of certainty, viz. " that I have no " criterion to diſtinguiſh falſe and doubtful ideas from " true and certain." Your lordſhip ſays, the academics went upon ideas, or repreſentations of things to their minds; and pray, my lord, does not your lordſhip do ſo too? Or has Mr. J. S. ſo won upon your lordſhip, by his ſolid philoſophy againſt the fancies of the ideiſts, that you begin to think him in the right in this too; where he ſays, " that notions are the ma-

Solid philoſophy, p. 24, and 27.

" terials of our knowledge; and that a no" tion is the very thing itſelf exiſting in
" the underſtanding?" For ſince I make no doubt but that, in all your lordſhip's knowledge, you will allow, that you have ſome immediate objects of your thoughts, which are the materials of that knowledge, about which it is employed, thoſe immediate objects, if they are not, as Mr. J. S. ſays, the very things themſelves, muſt be ideas. Not thinking your lordſhip therefore yet ſo perfect a convert of Mr. J. S.'s, that you are perſuaded, that as often as you think of your cathedral church, or of Des Cartes's vortices, that the very cathedral church at Worceſter, or the motion of thoſe vortices, itſelf exiſts in your underſtanding; when one of them never exiſted but in that one place at Worceſter, and the other never exiſted any where in " rerum

" na-

" natura." I conclude, your lordship has immediate objects of your mind, which are not the very things themselves existing in your understanding; which if, with the academics, you will please to call representations, as I suppose you will, rather than with me ideas, it will make no difference.

This being so, I must then make the same objection against your way of certainty by reason, that your lordship does against my way of certainty by ideas (for upon the comparison of these two we now are) and then I return your words here again, viz. " that you have no " criterion to distinguish false and doubtful representa- " tions from true and certain; how then can any man " be secure, that he is not imposed upon in your lord- " ship's way of representations?"

Your lordship says, " I tell you of a way of certainty " by ideas, and never offer any such method for exa- " mining them, as the academics required for their pro- " bability." Answ. I was not, I confess, so well acquainted with what the academics went upon for the criterion of a greater probability, as your lordship is; or if I had, I writing, as your lordship knows, out of my own thoughts, could not well transcribe out of them. But that you should tell me, I never offer any criterion to distinguish false from true ideas, I cannot but wonder; and therefore crave leave to beg your lordship to look again into b. ii. c. 32. of my Essay; and there, I persuade myself, you will find a criterion, whereby true and false ideas may be distinguished.

Your lordship brings for instance the idea of solidity; but what it is an instance of, I confess I do not see: " Your lordship charges on my way of certainty, that " I have no criterion to distinguish false and doubtful " ideas from true and certain; which is followed by " an account you give, how the academics examined " their ideas or representations, before they allowed " them to prevail on them to give an assent, as to a " greater probability." And then you tell me, that " I never offer any such method for examining them, " as the academics required for their probability:" to which your lordship subjoins these words; " as for

" inſtance, my firſt idea, which I go upon, of ſolidity." Would not one now expect, that this ſhould be an inſtance to make good your lordſhip's charge, that I have no criterion to diſtinguiſh, whether my idea of ſolidity were falſe and doubtful, or true and certain?

To ſhow that I have no ſuch criterion, your lordſhip aſks me two queſtions; the firſt is, " how my idea of " ſolidity comes to be clear and diſtinct?" I will ſuppoſe for once, that I know not how it comes to be clear and diſtinct: how will this prove, that I have no criterion to know whether it be true or falſe? For the queſtion here is not about knowing how an idea comes to be clear and diſtinct; but how I ſhall know whether it be true or falſe. But your lordſhip's following words ſeem to aim at a farther objection; your words all together are, " how this idea" [i. e. my idea of ſolidity, which conſiſts in repletion of ſpace, with an excluſion of all other ſolid ſubſtances] " comes to be clear and diſtinct " to me, when others who go on in the ſame way of " ideas, have quite another idea of it?" My lord, I deſire your lordſhip to name who thoſe " others" are, who go in the ſame way of ideas with me, who have quite another idea of this my idea than I have; for to this idea I could be ſure that " it," in any other writer but your lordſhip, muſt here refer: but, my lord, it is one of your privileged particles, and I have nothing to ſay to it. But let it be ſo, that others have quite another idea of it than I; how does that prove, that I have no criterion to diſtinguiſh whether my idea of ſolidity be true or no?

Your lordſhip farther adds, " that thoſe others think " that they have as plain and diſtinct an idea, that ex- " tenſion and body are the ſame:" and then your lordſhip aſks, " now what criterion is there to come to a " certainty in this matter?" Anſw. In what matter, I beſeech your lordſhip? If it be whether my idea of ſolidity be a true idea, which is the matter here in queſtion, in this matter I have given a criterion to know, in my Eſſay: if it be to decide the queſtion, whether the word " body" more properly ſtands for the ſimple idea of ſpace, or for the complex idea of space and solidity together, that is not the question here; nor can there be any other criterion to decide it by, but the propriety of our language.

B. II. c. 32.

ſpace

But your lordship adds, "ideas can have no way of "certainty in themselves, if it be possible for even philo- "losophical and rational men to fall into such con- "trary ideas about the same thing; and both sides think "their ideas to be clear and distinct." If this were so, I do not see how this would any way prove, that I had no criterion whereby it might be discerned, whether my ideas of solidity were true or no; which was to be proved.

But at last, this which your lordship calls "contrary "ideas about the same thing," is nothing but a difference about a name. For I think nobody will say, that the idea of extension and the idea of solidity are the same ideas: all the difference then between those philosophical and rational men, which your lordship mentions here, is no more but this, whether the simple idea of pure extension shall be called body, or whether the complex ideas of extension and solidity joined together, shall be called body; which will be no more than a bare verbal dispute to any one, who does not take sounds for things, and make the word body something more than a sign of what the speaker would signify by it. But what the speaker makes the term body stand for, cannot be precisely known, till he has determined it in his own mind, and made it known to another; and then there can between them be no longer a dispute about the signification of the word: v. g. if one of those philosophical rational men tells your lordship, that he makes the term body to stand precisely for the simple idea of pure extension, your lordship or he can be in no doubt or uncertainty concerning this thing; but whenever he uses the word body, your lordship must suppose in his mind the simple idea of extension, as the thing he means by body. If, on the other side, another of those philosophical rational men shall tell your lordship, that he makes the term body to stand precisely for a complex idea made up of the simple ideas of extension and solidity joined together; your lordship or he can be in no doubt doubt or uncertainty concerning this thing: but whenever he uſes the word body, your lordſhip muſt think on, and allow the idea belonging to it, to be that complex one.

As your lordſhip can allow this different uſe of the term body in theſe different men, without changing any idea, or any thing in your own mind, but the application of the ſame term to different ideas, which changes neither the truth nor certainty of any of your lordſhip's ideas, from what it was before: ſo thoſe two philoſophical rational men may, in diſcourſe one with another, agree to uſe that term body, for either of thoſe two ideas, which they pleaſe, without at all making their ideas, on either ſide, falſe or uncertain. But if they will conteſt which of theſe ideas the ſound body ought to ſtand for, it is viſible their difference is not about any reality of things, but the propriety of ſpeech; and their diſpute and doubt is only about the ſignification of a word.

Your lordſhip's ſecond queſtion is, "whether by this "idea of ſolidity we may come to know what it is." Anſw. I muſt aſk you here again, what you mean by it? If your lordſhip by it means ſolidity, then your queſtion runs thus: whether by this [i. e. my] "idea of "ſolidity, we may come to know what ſolidity is?" Anſw. Without doubt, if your lordſhip means by the term ſolidity what I mean by the term ſolidity; for then I have told you what it is, in the chapter above-cited by your lordſhip: if you mean any thing elſe by the term ſolidity, when your lordſhip will pleaſe to tell me what you mean by it, I will tell your lordſhip what ſolidity is. This, I humbly conceive, you will find yourſelf obliged to do, if what I have ſaid of ſolidity does not ſatisfy you what it is. For you will not think it reaſonable I ſhould tell your lordſhip what a thing is when expreſſed by you in a term, which I do not know what your lordſhip means by, nor what you make it ſtand for.

B. ii. c. 4.

But your lordſhip aſks, "wherein it conſiſts;" if you mean wherein the idea of it conſiſts, that I have already told your lordſhip, in the chapter of my Eſſay above-menmetioned. If your lordship means what is the real internal constitution, that physically makes solidity in things; if I answer I do not know, that will no more make my idea of solidity not to be true or certain (if your lordship thinks certainty may be attributed to single ideas) than the not knowing the physical constitution, whereby the parts of bodies are so framed as to cohere, makes my idea of cohesion not true or certain.

To my saying in my Essay, "that if any "one asks me what this solidity is, I send "him to his senses to inform him;" your lordship replies, "you thought the design of my book would have "sent him to his ideas for certainty: and are we, says "your lordship, sent back again from our ideas to our "senses?" Answ. I cannot help it, if your lordship mistakes the design of my book: for what concerns certainty, i. e. the knowledge of the truth of propositions, my book sends every one to his ideas; but for the getting of simple ideas of sensation, my book sends him only to his senses. But your lordship uses certainty here, in a sense I never used it, nor do understand it in; for what the certainty of any simple idea is, I confess I do not know, and shall be glad you would tell me what you mean by it. B. ii. c. 4. § 6.

However, in this sense you ask me, and that as if your question carried a demonstration of my contradicting myself: "and are we sent back again, from our ideas "to our senses?" Answ. My lord, every one is sent to his senses to get the simple ideas of sensation, because they are no other way to be got.

Your lordship presses on with this farther question, "what do these ideas signify then?" i. e. if a man be sent to his senses for the idea of solidity. I answer, to show him the certainty of propositions, wherein the agreement or disagreement of ideas is perceived; which is the certainty I speak of, and no other: but what the certainty is which your lordship speaks of in this and the following page, I confess I do not understand. For

Your lordship adds, that I say farther, "that if this "be not a sufficient explication of solidity, I promise "to tell any one what it is, when he tells me what "think-

" thinking is; or explains to me, what extenſion and " motion are." " Are we not now in the true way to " certainty, when ſuch things as theſe are given over, " of which we have the cleareſt evidence by ſenſation " and reflection? For here I make it as impoſſible to " come to certain, clear, and diſtinct notions of theſe " things, as to diſcourſe into a blind man the ideas of " light and colours. Is not this a rare way of certain- " ty?" Anſw. What things, my lord, I beſeech you, are thoſe which you here tell me are given over, of which we have the cleareſt evidence by ſenſation or reflection? It is likely you will tell me, they are extenſion and motion. But, my lord, I crave the liberty to ſay, that when you have conſidered again, you will be ſatisfied, there are no things given over in the caſe, but only the names extenſion and motion; and concerning them too, nothing is given over, but a power of defining them. When you will be pleaſed to lay by a little the warmth of thoſe queſtions of triumph, which I meet with in this paſſage, and tell me what things your lordſhip makes theſe names extenſion and motion to ſtand for; you perhaps will not find, that I make it impoſſible for thoſe, who have their ſenſes, to get the ſimple ideas, ſignified by theſe names, very clear and diſtinct by their ſenſes: though I do ſay, that theſe, as well as all other names of ſimple ideas, cannot be defined; nor any ſimple ideas be brought into our minds by words, any more than the ideas of light and colours can be diſcourſed into a blind man: which is all I do ſay in thoſe words of mine, which your lordſhip quotes, as ſuch wherein I have given over things, whereof we have the cleareſt evidence. And ſo from my being of opinion, that the names of ſimple ideas cannot be defined, nor thoſe ideas got by any words whatſoever, which is all that I there ſay; your lordſhip very pathetically expreſſes yourſelf, as if in my way all were gone, certainty were loſt; and if my method ſhould be allowed, there is an end of all knowledge in the world.

The reaſon your lordſhip gives againſt my way of certainty, is, " that I here make it as impoſſible to " come to certain, clear, and diſtinct notions of theſe " things, [i. e. extenſion and motion] as to diſcourſe " into

" into a blind man the idea of light and colours." Answ. What clear and distinct notions or ideas are, I do not understand: but what your lordship means by certain notions, speaking here, as you do, of simple ideas, I must own I do not understand. That for the attaining those simple ideas I send men to their senses, I shall think I am in the right, till I hear from your lordship better arguments to convince me of my mistake, than these: " Are we not now in the true way to " certainty? Is not this a rare way of certainty?" And if your lordship has a better way to get clear and distinct simple ideas, than by the senses, you will oblige me, and I think the world too, by a discovery of it. Till then, I shall continue in the same mind I was of, when I writ that passage, viz. That words can do nothing towards it, and that for the reason which I there promised, and is to be found, Essay, b. iii. c. 4. § 7, &c. And therefore to your lordship's saying, " that thus you have showed, " that I have no security against false and uncertain " ideas, no criterion to judge them by;" I think I may securely reply, that with submission thus showing it, is not showing it all; nor will ever show, that I have no such criterion, even when we shall add your lordship's farther inference, " now here again our ideas deceive us." Which supposing it a good inference from these words of mine, " that most of our simple ideas are " not the likenesses of things without us;" yet it seems to me to come in here, a little out of season: because the proposition to be proved, is, as I humbly conceive, not that our ideas deceive us, but that " I have not a " criterion to distinguish true from false ideas."

Essay, b. ii. c. 4. § 5, 6.

If it be brought to prove that I have no criterion, I have this to say, that I neither well understand what it is for our ideas to deceive us in the way of certainty; nor, in the best sense that I can give it, do I see how it proves that I have no criterion; nor lastly, how it follows from my saying that most of our simple ideas are not resemblances.

Your lordship seems by the following words to mean, that in this way by ideas which are confessed not to be resemreſemblances, men are hindered, and cannot go far in the knowledge of what they deſire to know of the nature of thoſe objects, of which we have the ideas in our minds. If this ſhould be ſo, what is this, I beſeech your lordſhip, to your ſhowing that I have no criterion? but that this is a fault in the way by ideas, I ſhall be convinced, when your lordſhip ſhall be pleaſed to ſhow me, how in your way of certainty by reaſon we can know more of the nature of things without us, or of that which cauſes theſe ideas or perceptions in us. But, I humbly conceive, it is no objection to the way of ideas, if any one will deceive himſelf, and expect certainty by ideas, in things where certainty is not to be had; becauſe he is told how knowledge or certainty is got by ideas, as far as men attain to it. And ſince your lordſhip is here comparing the ways of certainty by ideas and by reaſon, as two different and inconſiſtent ways, I humbly crave leave to add, that when you can ſhow me any one propoſition, which you have attained to a certainty of, in your way of certainty by reaſon, which I cannot attain to a certainty of in my way of certainty by ideas; I will acknowledge my Eſſay to be guilty of whatever your lordſhip pleaſes.

Your lordſhip concludes, "ſo that theſe ideas are "really nothing but names, if they be not repreſenta-"tions." Anſw. This does not yet ſhow, that I have no criterion to diſtinguiſh true from falſe ideas; the thing that your lordſhip is thus ſhowing. For I may have a criterion to diſtinguiſh true from falſe ideas, though that criterion concern not names at all. For your lordſhip, in this propoſition, allowing none to be ideas, but what are repreſentations; the other, which you ſay are nothing but names, are not concerned in the criterion, that is to diſtinguiſh true from falſe ideas: becauſe it relates to nothing but ideas, and the diſtinguiſhing of them one from another; unleſs true and falſe ideas can be any thing but ideas, i. e. ideas and not ideas at the ſame time.

But farther, I crave leave to anſwer, that your lordſhip's propoſition, viz. "that theſe ideas are really no-"thing but names, if they be not the repreſentations "of

" of things;" seems to me no consequence from my words, to which it is subjoined, though it is introduced with " so that:" for, methinks, it carries something like a contradiction in it. I say, " most of our simple " ideas of sensation are not the likeness of something " without us:" your lordship infers, " if so, these ideas " are really nothing but names;" which, as it seems to me, is as much as to say, these ideas, that are ideas, are not ideas, but names only. Methinks they might be allowed to be ideas, and that is all they pretend to be, though they do not resemble that which produces them. I cannot help thinking a son something really more than a bare name, though he has not the luck to resemble his father, who begot him: and the black and blue which I see I cannot conclude but to be something besides the words black and blue (wherever your lordship shall place that something, either in my perception only, or in my skin) though it resemble not at all the stone, that with a knock produced it.

Should your lordship put your two hands, whereof one is hot and the other cold, into lukewarm water; it would be hard to think that the idea of heat produced in you by one of your hands, and the idea of cold by the other, were the likenesses and very resemblances of something in the same water, since the same water could not be capable of having at the same time such real contrarieties. Wherefore since, as it is evident, they cannot be representations of any thing in the water, it follows by your lordship's doctrine here, that if you should declare what you feel, viz. that you feel heat and cold in that water, viz. heat by one hand, and cold by the other; you mean nothing by heat and cold: heat and cold in the case are nothing but names; and your lordship, in truth, feels nothing but these two names.

Your lordship, in the next place, proceeds to examine my way of demonstration. Whether you do this to show that I have no criterion, whereby to distinguish true from false ideas; or to show, " that my way of " certainty by ideas is inconsistent with the certainty of " deductions by reason;" (for these were the things you seemed to me to have undertaken to show, and there-therefore to be upon in this place) does not appear; but this appears by the words wherewith you introduce this examen, that it is to avoid doing me wrong.

Your lordſhip, as if you had been ſenſible that your former diſcourſe had led you towards doing me wrong, breaks it off of a ſudden, and begins this new one of demonſtration, by telling me, "you will do me no "wrong." Can it be thought now, that you forget this promiſe, before you get half through your examen? or is a miſciting my words, and miſrepreſenting my ſenſe, no wrong? Your lordſhip, in this very examen, ſets down a long quotation out of my Eſſay, and in the cloſe you tell me: "theſe are my own words which your "lordſhip has ſet down at large, that I may not com- "plain that you miſrepreſent my ſenſe:" this one would think guaranty enough in a leſs man than your lordſhip: and yet, my lord, I muſt crave leave to complain, that not only my ſenſe, but my very words, are in that quotation miſrepreſented.

To ſhow that my complaint is not groundleſs, give me leave, my lord, to ſet down my words, as I read them in that place of my book which your lordſhip quotes for them, and as I find them here in your ſecond letter. Eſſay, b. iv. c. 7. § 10.

'If we add all the ſelf-evident propoſitions may be made about all 'our diſtinct ideas, principles will 'be almoſt infinite, at leaſt innumerable, which men arrive to the 'knowledge of at different ages; and 'a great many of theſe innate princi- 'ples they never come to know all 'their lives. But whether they come 'in view of the mind earlier or later, 'this is true of them, that they are 'all known by their native evidence, 'are wholly independent, receive no 'light, nor are capable of any proof, 'one from another,' &c.

'That it is true 'of our particular diſtinct ideas, that they are 'all known by 'their native evidence, are wholly independent, 'receive no light, 'nor are capable 'of any proof, 'one from another,' &c.

By

By their standing thus together, the reader will without any pains see whether those your lordship has set down in your letter are my own words; and whether in that place, which speaks only of self-evident propositions or principles, I have any thing in words or in sense like this, "that our particular distinct ideas are known "by their native evidence, &c." Though your lordship closes the quotation with that solemn declaration above-mentioned, "that they are my own words, which "you have set down at large, that I may not complain "you misrepresent my sense." And yet nothing can more misrepresent my sense than they do, applying all that to particular ideas, which I speak there only of self-evident propositions or principles; and that so plainly, that I think I may venture any one's mistaking it in my own words: and upon this misrepresentation of my sense your lordship raises a discourse, and manages a dispute for, I think, a dozen pages following, against my placing demonstration on self-evident ideas; though self-evident ideas are things wholly unknown to me; and are no where in my book, nor were in my thoughts.

But let us come to your exceptions against my way of demonstration, which your lordship is pleased to call demonstration without principles. Answ. If you mean by principles self-evident propositions, then you know my demonstration is not without principles, in that sense of the term principles: for your lordship in the next page blames my way, because I suppose every intermediate idea in demonstration to have a self-evident connexion with the other idea; for two such ideas as have a self-evident connexion, joined together in a proposition, make a self-evident proposition. If your lordship means by principles those which in the place there quoted by your lordship I mean, viz. "whatever "is, is; and it is impossible for the same "thing to be, and not to be;" and such other general propositions, as are received under the name of maxims; I grant, that I do say, that they are not absolutely requisite in every demonstration; and I think I have shown, that there be demonstrations which may be made without them: though I do not, that I remember, ſay, that they are excluded, and cannot be made uſe of in demonſtration.

Essay, b. iv. c. 2. § 8.

Your lordſhip's firſt argument againſt my way of demonſtration, is, "that it muſt ſuppoſe ſelf-evidence "muſt be in the ideas of my mind; and that every in- "termediate idea, which I take to demonſtrate any "thing by, muſt have a ſelf-evident connexion with the "others." Anſw. Taking ſelf-evidence in the ideas of the mind to mean in the perceived agreement or diſagreement of ideas in the mind; I grant, I do not only ſuppoſe, but ſay ſo.

To prove it not to be ſo in demonſtration, your lordſhip ſays, "that it is ſuch a way of demonſtration, as "the old philoſophers never thought of." Anſw. Nobody, I think, will queſtion, that your lordſhip is very well read in the old philoſophers: but he that will anſwer for what the old philoſophers ever did, or did not think of, muſt not only underſtand their extant writings better than any man ever did; but muſt have ways to know their thoughts, that other men have not. For all of them thought more than they writ; ſome of them writ not at all, and others writ a great deal more than ever came to us. But if it ſhould happen, that any of them placed the proof of any propoſition in the agreement of two things in a third, as I think ſome of them did; then it will, I humbly conceive, appear, that they did think of my demonſtration; unleſs your lordſhip can ſhow, that they could ſee that two things agreed in a third, without perceiving their agreement with that third: and if they did in every ſyllogiſm of a demonſtration perceive that agreement, then there was a ſelf-evident connexion; which is that which your lordſhip ſays they never thought of.

But ſuppoſing they never thought of it, muſt we put out our eyes, and not ſee whatever they overlooked? Are all the diſcoveries made by Galileo, my lord Bacon, Mr. Boyle, and Mr. Newton, &c. to be rejected as falſe, becauſe they teach us what the old philoſophers never thought of? Miſtake me not, my lord, in thinking that I have the vanity here to rank myſelf, on this occaſion, with these great discoverers of truth, and advancers of knowledge. On the contrary, I contend, that my way of certainty, my way of demonstration, which your lordship so often condemns for its newness, is not new; but is the very same that has always been used, both by ancients and moderns. I am only considering here your lordship's argument, of never having been thought of by the old philosophers; which is an argument that will make nothing for or against the truth of any proposition advanced by a modern writer, till your lordship has proved, that those old philosophers (let the happy age of old philosophers determine where your lordship pleases) did discover all truth, or that they had the sole privilege to search after it, and besides them nobody was to study nature, nobody was to think or reason for himself; but every one was to be barely a reading philosopher, with an implicit faith.

with

Your objection in the next words, that then every demonstration carries its own light with it, shows that your way by reason is what I do not understand. For this I thought heretofore was the property of demonstration, and not a proof that it was not a demonstration, that it carried its own light with it: but yet though in every demonstration there is a self-evident connexion of the ideas, by which it is made; yet that it does not follow from thence, as your lordship here objects, that then every demonstration would be as clear and unquestionable as that two and two make four, your lordship may see in the same chapter, and the reason of it. Essay, b. iv. c. 2. § 4, 5, 6.

You seem in the following words to allow, that there is such a connexion of the intermediate ideas in mathematical demonstration; but say, "you should be glad "to see any demonstration (not about figures and num-"bers) of this kind." And if that be a good argument against it, I crave leave to use it too on my side; and to say, "that I would be glad to see any demon-"stration (not about figures and numbers) not of this "kind;" i. e. wherein there is not a self-evident connexion of all the intermediate ideas. If you have any such, I earnestly beg your lordship to favour me with it; for I crave liberty to say, that the reason, and form, and way of evidence in demonstration, where-ever there is demonstration, is always the same.

But you say, "THIS is a quite different case from "mine:" I suppose your lordship means by THIS, mathematical demonstration, the thing mentioned in the preceding period; and then your sense will run thus: mathematical demonstrations, wherein certainty is to be had by the intuition of the self-evident connexion of all the intermediate ideas, are different from that demonstration which I am there treating of. If you mean not so, I must own, I know not what you mean by saying, "THIS is a quite different case from mine." And if your lordship does mean so, I do not see how it can be so as you say: your words taken all together run thus: "my principle ground is from mathematical de-"monstrations, and my examples are brought from "them. But this is quite a different case from mine:" i. e. I am speaking in that chapter of my Essay concerning demonstration in general, and the certainty we have by it. The examples I use are brought from mathematics, and yet you say, "mathematical demonstra-"tions are quite a different case from mine." If I here misunderstand your lordship's THIS, I must beg your pardon for it; it is one of your privileged particles, and I am not master of it. Misrepresent your sense I cannot; for your very words are set down, and let the reader judge.

But your lordship gives a reason for what you had said in these words subjoined, where you say, "I grant "that those ideas, on which mathematical demonstra-"tions proceed, are wholly in the mind, and do not "relate to the existence of things; but our debate goes "upon a certainty of knowledge of things as really "existing." In which words there are these things remarkable:

1. That your lordship's exception here, is against what I have said concerning demonstration in my Essay, and not against any thing I have said in either of my letters to your lordship. If therefore your lordship and I have since, in our letters, had any debate about the certainty certainty of the knowledge of things as really existing; that which was writ before that debate, could have no relation to it, nor be limited by it. If therefore your lordship makes any exception (as you do) to my way of demonstration, as proposed in my Essay, you must, as I humbly conceive, take it as delivered there, comprehending mathematical demonstrations; which cannot be excluded, because your lordship says, "our debate "now goes upon a certainty of the knowledge of things "as really existing, supposing mathematical demon- "strations did not afford a certainty of knowledge of "things as really existing."

2. But in the next place, mathematical demonstrations do afford a certainty of the knowledge of things as really existing, as much as any other demonstrations whatsoever; and therefore they afford your lordship no ground upon that account to separate them, as you do here, from demonstrations in other subjects.

Your lordship indeed thinks I have given you sufficient grounds to charge me with the contrary: for you say, "I grant that those ideas, on which mathematical "demonstrations proceed, are wholly in the mind;" this indeed I grant: "and do not relate to the existence "of things;" but these latter words I do not remember that I any where say. And I wish you had quoted the place where I grant any such thing; I am sure it is not in that place, where it is likeliest to be found: I mean, where I examine, whether the knowledge we have of mathematical truths, be the knowledge of things as really existing: there I say (and I think I have proved) that it is, though it consists in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of ideas, that are only in the mind; because it takes in all those things, really existing, which answer those ideas. Upon which grounds it was, that I there affirmed moral knowledge also capable of certainty. And pray, my lord, what other way can your lordship proceed, in any demonstration you would make, about any other thing but figures and numbers, but the same that you do in demonstrations about figures and numbers? If you would demonſtrate any thing concerning man or murder, muſt you not firſt ſettle in your mind the idea or notion you have of that animal or that action, and then ſhow what you would demonſtrate neceſſarily to belong to that idea in your mind, and to thoſe things exiſting only as they correſpond with, and anſwer that idea in your mind? How elſe you can make any general propoſition, that ſhall contain the knowledge of things as really exiſting, I that am ignorant ſhould be glad to learn, when your lordſhip ſhall do me the favour to ſhow me any ſuch.

Essay, b. iv. c. 4. § 6.

Essay, b. iv. c. 4. § 7.

In the mean time, there is no reaſon why you ſhould except demonſtrations about figures and numbers, from demonſtrations about other ſubjects, upon the account that I grant, "that thoſe ideas, on which mathematical "demonſtrations proceed, are wholly in the mind," when I ſay the ſame of all other demonſtrations. For the ideas that other demonſtrations proceed on, are wholly in the mind. And no demonſtration whatſoever concerns things as really exiſting, any farther than as they correſpond with, and anſwer thoſe ideas in the mind, which the demonſtration proceeds on. This diſtinction therefore here of your lordſhip's, between mathematical and other demonſtrations, having no foundation, your inference founded on it falls with it; viz. "So that although we ſhould grant all that I ſay "about the intuition of ideas in mathematical demon-"ſtrations, yet it comes not at all to my buſineſs, un-"leſs I can prove, that we have as clear and diſtinct "ideas of beings, as we have of numbers and figures." Though how beings here and numbers and figures come to be oppoſed againſt one another, I ſhall not be able to conceive, till I am better inſtructed, than hitherto I am, that numbers and figures are no beings; and that the mathematicians and philoſophers, old ones and all, have, in all the pains taken about them, employed their thoughts about nothing. And I would be glad to know what thoſe things are, which your lordſhip ſays "our debate goes upon here as really exiſting, that are "beings more than numbers and figures."

Your

Your lordship's next exception against my way of demonstration, is, that "in it I am inconsistent with "myself." For proof of it, you say, "I design to "prove demonstrations without general principles; "and yet every one knows that general principles are "supposed in mathematics." Answ. Every one may know that general principles are supposed in mathematics, without knowing, or ever being able to know, that I, who say also that mathematicians do often make use of them, am inconsistent with myself; though I also say, that a demonstration about numbers and figures may be made without them.

To prove me inconsistent with myself, you add: "and that person would be thought ridiculous, who "should go about to prove, that general principles are "of little use, or of dangerous use in mathematical "demonstrations." A man may make other ridiculous faults in writing, besides inconsistency, and there are instances enough of it: but by good luck I am in this place clear of what would be thought ridiculous, which yet is no proof of inconsistency. For I never "went "about to prove, that general principles are of little "or dangerous use in mathematical demonstrations."

To prove me inconsistent with myself, your lordship uses one argument more, and that is, "that I confess "that the way of demonstration in morality, is from "principles, as those of mathematics by necessary con-"sequences." Answ. With submission, my lord, I do not say in the place quoted by your lordship, "that the way of demonstration in "morality is from principles, as those of "the mathematics by necessary consequences." But this is that which I say, "that I doubt not but in mo-"rality from principles, as inconteſtable as those of "the mathematics, by necessary consequences, the "measures of right and wrong might be made out." Which words, I humbly conceive, have no inconsistency with my saying, there may be demonstrations without the help of maxims; whatever inconsistency the words which you here set down for mine, may have with it. B. iv. c. 3. § 18.

My lord, the words you bring out of my book are so often different from those I read in the places which you refer to, that I am sometimes ready to think, you have got some strange copy of it, whereof I know nothing, since it so seldom agrees with mine. Pardon me, my lord, if with some care I examine the objection of inconsistency with myself; that if I find any, I may retract the one part or the other of it. Human frailty, I grant, and variety of thought in long discourses, may make a man unwittingly advance inconsistencies. This may consist with ingenuity, and deserve to be excused: but for any one to persist in it, when it is showed him, is to give himself the lye; which cannot but stick closer to him in the sense of all rational men, than if he received it from another.

I own, I have said, in my Essay, that there be demonstrations, which may be made without those general maxims, that I there treated of. But I cannot recollect, that I ever said, that those general maxims could not be made use of in demonstration: for they are no more shut out of my way of demonstration, than any other self-evident propositions. And therefore there is no inconsistency in those two propositions, which are mine, viz. "Some demonstrations may be "made without the help of those general maxims," and "morality, I doubt not, may be demonstrated "from principles;" whatever inconsistency may be in these two following propositions, which are your lordship's, and not mine, viz. "the way of demonstration "in morality is from principles, and general maxims "are not the way to proceed on in demonstration, as "to other parts of knowledge." For to admit self-evident propositions, which is what I mean by principles, in the place of my Essay, which your lordship quotes for the first of my inconsistent propositions, and to say (as I do in the other place quoted by your lordship) "that those magnified maxims are not "the principles and foundations of all our other know-"ledge;" has no manner of inconsistency. For though I think them not necessary to every demonstration, so neither neither do I exclude them any more than other self-evident propositions out of any demonstration, wherein any one should make use of them.

B. iv. c. 3, § 18.

B. iv. c. 7. § 10.

The next objection against my way of demonstration, from my placing demonstration on the self-evidence of ideas, having been already answered, I shall need to say nothing in defence of it; or in answer to any thing raised against it, in your twelve or thirteen following pages upon that topic. But that your lordship may not think I do not pay a due respect to all that you say, I shall not wholly pass those pages over in silence.

1. Your lordship says, that "I confess that some of "the most obvious ideas are far from being self-evi-"dent." Answ. Supposing I did say so, how, I beseech your lordship, does it prove, that "it is impossi-"ble to come to a demonstration about real beings, in "this way of intuition by ideas?" Which is the proposition you promise to make appear, and you bring this as the first reason to make it appear. For should I confess a thousand times over, "that some of the "most obvious ideas are far from being self-evident;" and should I, which I do not, make self-evident ideas necessary to demonstration: how will it thence follow, that it is impossible to come to a demonstration, &c.? since though I should confess some of the most obvious ideas not to be self-evident; yet my confession being but of some, it will not follow from my confession, but that there may be also some self-evident: and so still it might be possible to come to demonstration by intuition, because "some" in my use of the word never signifies "all."

In the next place, give me leave to ask, where it is that I confess, that "some ideas are not self-evident?" Nay, where it is, that I once mention any such thing as a self-evident idea? For self-evident is an epithet, that I do not remember I ever gave to any idea, or thought belonged at all to ideas. In all the places you have produced out of my Essay, concerning matter, motion, time, duration, and light; which are those ideas your lordship is pleased to instance in, to prove, that "I have confessed it of some;" I crave leave humbly to offer it to your lordſhip, that there is not any ſuch confeſſion. However, you go on to prove it. The propoſition then to be proved, is, that "I confeſs "that theſe are far from being ſelf-evident ideas." It is neceſſary to ſet it down, and carry it in our minds; for the propoſition to be proved, is, I find, a very ſlippery thing, and apt to ſlide out of the way.

bly

Your lordſhip's proof is, that according to me, "we "can have no intuition of theſe things which are ſo "obvious to us, and conſequently we can have no ſelf-"evident ideas of them." The force of which proof, I confeſs, I do not underſtand. "We have no intuition "of the obvious thing matter, and the obvious thing "motion; ergo, we have no ſelf-evident ideas of them." Granting that they are obvious things, and that obvious as they are, we have, as you expreſs it, no intuition of them; it will not follow from thence, that we have no intuition of the ideas we ſignify by the names matter and motion, and ſo have no ſelf-evident ideas of them. For whoever has in his mind an idea, which he makes the name matter or motion ſtand for, has no doubt that idea there, and ſees, or has, in your phraſe, an intuition of it there; and ſo has a ſelf-evident idea of it, if intuition, according to your lordſhip, makes a ſelf-evident idea (for of ſelf-evident ideas, as I have before remarked, I have ſaid nothing, nor made any ſuch diſtinction as ſelf-evident and not ſelf-evident ideas) and if intuition of an idea does not make a ſelf-evident idea, the want of it is in vain brought here to prove the idea of matter or motion not ſelf-evident.

But your lordſhip proceeds to inſtances, and your firſt inſtance is in matter: and here, for fear of miſtaking, let us remember what the propoſition to be proved is, viz. that "according to me, we have no intuition, "as you call it, of the idea of matter." Your lordſhip begins and tells me, that I give this account of the idea of matter, that "it conſiſts in a ſolid ſubſtance, every-"where the ſame." Whereupon you tell me, "you "would be glad to come to a certain knowledge of "theſe two things; firſt, the manner of the coheſion "of the parts of matter, and the demonſtration of the "diviſibility

" divisibility of it in the way of ideas." Answ. It happened just as I feared, the proposition to be proved is slipt already quite out of sight: you own that I say matter is a solid substance, every-where the same. This idea, which is the idea signified by the word matter, I have in my mind, and have an intuition of it there: how then does this prove, that according to me, " there " can be no intuition of the idea of matter?" Leaving therefore this proposition, which was to be proved, you bring places out of my book to show, that we do not know wherein the union and cohesion of the parts of matter consist; and that the divisibility of matter involves us in difficulties: neither of which either is, or proves, that " according to me, we cannot have an intuition of " the idea of matter;" which was the proposition to be proved, and seems quite forgotten during the three following pages, wholly employed upon this instance of matter. You ask indeed, " whether I can imagine, " that we have intuition into the idea of matter?" But those words seem to me to signify quite another thing, than having an intuition of the idea of matter, as appears by your explication of them in these words subjoined: " or that it is possible to come to a demonstra- " tion about it, by the help of any intervening ideas:" whereby it seems to me plain, that by intuition into it, your lordship means " demonstration about it," i. e. some knowledge concerning matter, and not a bare view or intuition of the idea you have of it. And that your lordship speaks of knowledge concerning some affection of matter, in this and the following question, and not of the bare intuition of the idea of matter; is farther evident from the introduction of your two questions, wherein you say, " there are two things concerning " matter, that you would be glad to come to a certain " knowledge of." So that all that can follow, or in your sense of them does follow, from my words quoted by you, is, that I own, that the cohesion of its parts is an affection of matter that is hard to be explained; but from them it can neither be inferred, nor does your lordship attempt to infer, that any one cannot view or have an intuition of the idea he has in his own mind, which he ſignifies to others by the word matter: and that you did not make any ſuch inference from them, is farther plain, by your aſking, in the place above quoted, not only "whether I can imagine, that it is poſſible to "come to a demonſtration about it;" but your lordſhip alſo adds, "by the help of any intervening ideas." For I do not think you demand a demonſtration by the help of intervening ideas, to make you ſee, i. e. have an intuition of your own idea of matter. It would miſbecome me to underſtand your lordſhip in ſo ſtrange a ſenſe; for then you might have juſt occaſion to aſk me again, "whether I could think you a man of ſo little "ſenſe?" I therefore ſuppoſe, as your words import, that you demand a demonſtration by the help of intervening ideas to ſhow you, how the parts of that thing, which you repreſent to yourſelf by that idea, to which you give the name matter, cohere together; which is nothing to the queſtion of the intuition of the idea: though to cover the change of the queſtion, as dextrouſly as might be, "intuition of the idea" is changed into "intuition into the idea;" as if there were no difference between looking upon a watch, and looking into a watch, i. e. between the idea that, taken from an obvious view, I ſignify by the name watch, and have in my mind when I uſe the word watch; and the being able to reſolve any queſtion that may be propoſed to me, concerning the inward make and contrivance of a watch. The idea which taken from the outward viſible parts I give the name watch to, I perceive or have an intuition of, in my mind equally, whether or no I know any thing more of a watch, than what is repreſented in that idea.

Upon this change of the queſtion, all that follows to the bottom of the next page, being to ſhow, that from what I ſay it follows, that there be many difficulties concerning matter, which I cannot reſolve; many queſtions concerning it, which I think cannot be demonſtratively decided; and not to ſhow, that any one cannot perceive, or have an intuition, as you call it, of his own idea of matter: I think I need not trouble your ordſhip with an anſwer to it.

In

In this one instance of matter, you have been pleased to ask me two hard questions. To shorten your trouble concerning this business of intuition of ideas, will you, my lord, give me leave to ask you this one easy question concerning all your four instances, matter, motion, duration, and light, viz. what you mean by these four words? That your lordship may not suspect it to be either captious or impertinent, I will tell you the use I shall make of it: if your lordship tell me what you mean by these names, I shall presently reply, that there then are the ideas that you have of them in your mind; and it is plain you see or have an intuition of them, as they are in your mind, or, as I should have expressed it, perceive them as they are there, because you can tell them to another. And so it is with every one, who can tell what he means by those words; and therefore to all such (amongst which I crave leave to be one) there can be no doubt of the intuition of those ideas. But if your lordship will not tell me what you mean by these terms, I fear you will be thought to use very hard measure in disputing, by demanding to be satisfied concerning questions put in terms, which you yourself cannot tell the meaning of.

This considered, will perhaps serve to show, that all that you say in the following paragraphs, to n. 2. p. 141, contains nothing against intuition of ideas, which is what you are upon, though it be no notion of mine; much less does it contain any thing against my way of demonstration by ideas, which is the point under proof. For,

1. What your lordship has said about the idea of matter, hath been considered already.

2. From motion, which is your second instance, your argument stands thus: that because I say, the definitions I meet with of motion are insignificant, therefore the idea fails us. This seems to me a strange consequence; and all one as to say, that a deaf and dumb man, because he could not understand the words used in the definitions that are given of motion, therefore he could not have the idea of motion, or the idea of motion failed him. And yet this consequence, as foreign as it is to that antecedent, is forced from it to no purpoſe: the propoſition to be inferred being this, that then "we "can have no intuition of the idea of motion."

that

3. As to time, though the intuition of the idea of time be not my way of ſpeaking, yet what your lordſhip here infers from my words, granting it to be a right inference, with ſubmiſſion, proves nothing againſt the intuition of that idea. The propoſition to be proved, is, "that we can have no intuition of the idea of time;" and the propoſition which from my words you infer, is, "that we have not the knowledge of the idea of time "by intuition, but by rational deduction." What can be more remote than theſe two propoſitions? The one of them ſignifying (if it ſignifies any thing) the view the mind has of it; the other, as I gueſs, the original and riſe of it. For "what it is to have the knowledge "of an idea, not by intuition, but by deduction of rea-"ſon," I confeſs I do not well underſtand; only I am ſure, in terms it is not the ſame with having the intuition of an idea: but if changing of terms were not ſome men's privilege, perhaps ſo much controverſy would not be written. The meaning of either of theſe propoſitions I concern not myſelf about, for neither of them is mine. I only here ſhow, that you do not prove the propoſition that you yourſelf framed, and undertook to prove.

Since, my lord, you are ſo favourable to me, as to ſeem willing to correct whatever you can find any way amiſs in my Eſſay: therefore I ſhall endeavour to ſatisfy you concerning the riſe of our idea of duration, from the ſucceſſion of ideas in our minds. Againſt this, though it be nothing to the matter in hand, you object, "that ſome people reckoned ſucceſſion of time right "by knots, and notches, and figures, without ever "thinking of ideas." Anſw. It is certain that men, who wanted better ways, might, by knots or notches, keep accounts of the numbers of certain ſtated lengths of time, as well as of the numbers of men in their country, or of any other numbers; and that too without ever conſidering the immediate objects of their thoughts under the name of ideas: but that they ſhould count count time, without ever thinking of something, is very hard to me to conceive; and the things they thought on, or were present in their minds, when they thought, are what I call ideas: thus much in answer to what your lordship says. But to any one that shall put the objection stronger, and say, Many have had the idea of time, who never reflected on the constant train of ideas, succeeding one another in their minds, whilst waking, I grant it; but add, that want of reflection makes not any thing cease to be: if it did, many men's actions would have no cause, nor rise, nor manner; because many men never reflect so far on their own actions, as to consider what they are bottomed on, or how they are performed. A man may measure duration by motion, of which he has no other idea, but of a constant succession of ideas in train; and yet never reflect on that succession of ideas in his mind. A man may guess at the length of his stay by himself in the dark; here is no succession to measure by, but that of his own thoughts; and without some succession, I think there is no measure of duration. But though in this case he measures the length of the duration by the train of his ideas, yet he may never reflect on that, but conclude he does it he knows not how.

You add, "but besides such arbitrary measures of "time, what need any recourse to ideas, when the re-"turns of days, and months, and years, by the plane-"tary motions, are so easy and so universal?" Such, here, as I suppose, refers to the knots, and notches, and figures before-mentioned: if it does not, I know not what it refers to; and if it does, it makes those knots and notches measures of time, which I humbly conceive they were not, but only arbitrary ways of recording (as all other ways of recording are) certain numbers of known lengths of time: for though any one sets down by arbitrary marks, as notches on a stick, or strokes of chalk on a trenchard, or figures on paper, the number of yards of cloth, or pints of milk that are delivered to a customer; yet I suppose no-body thinks, that the cloth or milk were measured by those notches, strokes of chalk, or figures, which therefore are by no means the arbitrary arbitrary meaſures of thoſe things. But what this is againſt, I confeſs I do not ſee: this, I am ſure, it is not againſt any thing I have ſaid. For, as I remember, I have ſaid (though not the planetary motions, yet) that the motions of the ſun and the moon are the beſt meaſures of time. But if you mean, that the idea of duration is rather taken from the planetary motions, than from the ſucceſſion of ideas in our minds, I crave leave to doubt of that; becauſe motion no other way diſcovers itſelf to us, but by a ſucceſſion of ideas.

Your next argument againſt my thinking the idea of time to be derived from the train of ideas, ſucceeding one another in our minds, is, that your lordſhip thinks the contrary. This, I muſt own, is an argument by way of authority, and I humbly ſubmit to it; though I think ſuch arguments produce no certainty, either in my way of certainty by ideas, or in your way of certainty by reaſon.

4. As to your fourth inſtance, you having ſet down my exceptions to the peripatetic and Carteſian definitions of light, you ſubjoin this queſtion: "And is this "a ſelf-evident idea of light?" I beg leave to anſwer in the ſame way by a queſtion, and whoever ſaid or thought that it was, or meant that it ſhould be? He muſt have a ſtrange notion of ſelf-evident ideas, let them be what they will (for I know them not) who can think, that the ſhowing others definitions of light to be unintelligible, is a ſelf-evident idea of light. But farther, my lord, what, I beſeech you, has a ſelf-evident idea of light to do here? I thought in this your inſtance of light, you were making good what you undertook to prove from myſelf, that we have no intuition of light. But becauſe that perhaps would have ſounded pretty oddly, you thought fit (which I with all ſubmiſſion crave leave ſometimes to take notice of) to change the queſtion: but the misfortune is, that put as it is, not concerning our intuition, but the ſelf-evidence of the idea of light, the one is no better proved than the other: and yet your lordſhip concludes this your firſt head according to your uſual form: "thus we have ſeen what ac-"count the author of the Eſſay himſelf has given of

"theſe

" these self-evident ideas, which are the ground-work " of demonstration." With submission, my lord, he must have good eyes, who has seen an account I have given in my Essay of self-evident ideas, when neither in all that your lordship has quoted out of it, no nor in my whole Essay, self-evident ideas are so much as once mentioned. And where the account I have given of a thing, which I never thought upon, is to be seen, I cannot imagine. What your lordship farther tells me concerning them, viz. " that self-evident ideas are the " ground-work of demonstration," I also assure you is perfect news to me, which I never met with any where but in your lordship: though if I had made them the ground-work of demonstration, as you say, I think they might remain so, notwithstanding any thing your lordship has produced to the contrary.

We are now come to your second head, where I expected to have found this consequence made good, " that " there may be contradictory opinions about ideas " which I account most clear and distinct; ergo, it is " impossible to come to a demonstration about real " beings in the way of intuition of ideas." For this you told me was your second reason to prove this proposition. This consequence your lordship, it seems, looks upon as so clear, that it needs no proof; I can find none here where you take it up again. To prove something, you say, " suppose an idea happen to be thought " by some to be clear and distinct, and others should " think the contrary to be so:" in obedience to your lordship, I do suppose it. But, when it is supposed, will that make good the above-mentioned consequence? You, yourself, my lord, do not so much as pretend it; but in this question subjoined, " What hopes of demon- " stration by clear and distinct ideas then?" infer a quite different proposition. For " it is impossible to come " to a demonstration about real beings in the way of " intuition of ideas;" and there is " no hopes of de- " monstration by clear and distinct ideas;" appear to me two very different propositions.

There appears something to me yet more incomprehensible in your way of managing this argument here. Your reaſon is, as we have ſeen, in theſe words, " there may " be contradictory opinions about ſome ideas, that I " account moſt clear and diſtinct:" and your inſtance of it in theſe words, " ſuppoſe an idea happen to be " thought by ſome to be clear and diſtinct, and others " ſhould think the contrary to be ſo." Anſw. So they may, without having any contradictory opinions about any idea, that I account moſt clear and diſtinct. A man may think his idea of heat to be clear and diſtinct, and another may think his idea of cold (which I take to be the contrary idea to that of heat) to be clear and diſtinct, and be both in the right, without the leaſt appearance of any contradictory opinion. All therefore that your lordſhip ſays, in the remaining part of this paragraph, having nothing in it of contradictory opinions about ideas that I think moſt clear, ſerves not at all to make good your ſecond reaſon. The truth is, all that you ſay here concerning Des Cartes's idea of ſpace, and another man's idea of ſpace, amounts to no more but this, that different men may ſignify different ideas by the ſame name, and will never fix on me what your lordſhip would perſuade the world I ſay, " that both " parts of a contradiction may be true." Though I do ſay, that in ſuch a looſe uſe of the terms body and vacuum, it may be demonſtrated, both that there is, and is not a vacuum: which is a contradiction in words, and is apt to impoſe, as if it were ſo in ſenſe, on thoſe who miſtake words for things; who are a kind of reaſoners, whereof I perceive there is a greater number than I thought there had been. All that I have ſaid in that place quoted by your lordſhip, is nothing but to ſhow the danger of relying upon maxims, without a careful guard upon the uſe of words, without which they will ſerve to make demonſtrations on both ſides. That this is ſo, I dare appeal to any reader, ſhould your lordſhip preſs me again, as you do here, with all the force of theſe words, " Say you ſo? What! demonſtrations on both ſides? " And in the way of ideas too? This is extraordinary " indeed!"

Eſſay, b. iv. c. 7. § 12.

That

That all the opposition between Des Cartes and those others, is only about the naming of ideas, I think may be made appear from these words of your lordship in the next paragraph: "in the ideas of space and body, "the question supposed, is, whether they be the same "or no." That this is a question only about names, and not about ideas themselves, is evident from hence, that nobody can doubt whether the single idea of pure distance, and the two ideas of distance and solidity, are one and the same idea or different ideas, any more than he can doubt whether one and two are different. The question then in the case, is not whether extension considered separately by itself, or extension and solidity together, be the same idea or no; but whether the simple idea of extension alone, shall be called body, or the complex idea of solidity and extension together, shall be called body. For that these ideas themselves are different, I think I need not go about to prove to any one, who ever thought of emptiness or fulness: for whether in fact the bottle in a man's hand be empty or no, or can by him be emptied or no; this, I think, is plain, that his idea of fulness, and his idea of emptiness, are not the same. This the very dispute concerning a vacuum supposes: for if men's idea of pure space were not different from their idea of solidity and space together, they could never so far separate them in their thoughts, as to make a question, whether they did always exist together, any more than they could question, whether the same thing existed with itself. Motion cannot be separated in existence from space; and yet nobody ever took the idea of space and the idea of motion to be the same. Solidity likewise cannot exist without space; but will any one from thence say, the idea of solidity and the idea of space are one and the same?

Your lordship's third reason, to prove that "it is im- "possible to come to a demonstration about real beings "in this way of intuition of ideas, is, that granting the "ideas to be true, there is no self-evidence of the con- "nexion of them, which is necessary to make a demon- "stration." This, I must own, is to me as incomprehensible a consequence as the former; as also is that which your lordſhip ſays to make it out, which I ſhall ſet down in your own words, that its force may be left entire to the reader: "But granting the ideas to be true, "yet when their connexion is not ſelf-evident, then an "intermediate idea muſt complete the demonſtration. "But how doth it appear, that this middle idea is ſelf-"evidently connected with them? For it is ſaid, if that "intermediate idea be not known by intuition, that muſt "need a proof; and ſo there can be no demonſtration: "which your lordſhip is very apt to believe in this way "of ideas; unleſs theſe ideas get more light by being "put between two others." Whatever there be in theſe words to prove the propoſition in queſtion, I leave the reader to find out; but that he may not be led into miſtake, that there is any thing in my words that may be ſerviceable to it, I muſt crave leave to acquaint him, that theſe words ſet down by your lordſhip, as out of my Eſſay, are not to be found in that place, nor any where in my book, or any thing to this purpoſe, "that "the intermediate idea is to be known by "intuition;" but this, that there muſt be an intuitive knowledge or perception of the agreement or diſagreement of the intermediate idea with thoſe, whoſe agreement or diſagreement by its intervention it demonſtrates.

B. iv. c. ii. § 7.

Leaving therefore all that your lordſhip brings out of Gaſſendus, the Carteſians, Morinus, and Bernier, in their argument from motion, for or againſt a vacuum, as not being at all concerned in it; I ſhall only crave leave to obſerve, that you ſeem to make uſe here of the ſame way of argumentation, which I think I may call your main, if not only one, it occurs ſo often, viz. that when I have ſaid any thing to ſhow wherein certainty or demonſtration, &c. conſiſts, you think it ſufficiently overthrown, if you can produce any inſtance out of my book, of any thing advanced by me, which comes ſhort of certainty or demonſtration: whereas, my lord, I humbly conceive, it is no proof againſt my notion of certainty, or my way of demonſtration, that I cannot attain to them in all caſes. I only tell wherein they conſiſt, wherever they are; but if I miſs of either of them, either by reaſon of the the nature of the subject, or by inadvertency in my way of proof, that is no objection to the truth of my notions of them: for I never undertook that my way of certainty or demonstration, if it ought to be called my way, should make me or any one omniscient or infallible.

That which makes it necessary for me here again to take notice of this your way of reasoning, is the question wherewith you wind up the account you have given of the dispute of the parties above-named about a vacuum: "and is it possible to imagine, that there should "be a self-evident connexion in the case?" Answ. It concerns not me to examine, whether, or on which side, in that dispute, such a self-evident connexion is, or is not possible. But this I take the liberty to say, that wherever it is not, there is no demonstration, whether it be the Cartesians or the Gassendists that failed in this point. And I humbly conceive, that to conclude from any one's failing in this, or any other case, of a self-evident connexion in each step of his proof, that therefore it is not necessary in demonstration; is a conclusion without grounds, and a way of arguing that proves nothing.

In the next paragraph you come to wind up the argument, which you have been so long upon, viz. to make good what you undertook; i. e. "to show the differ-"ence of my method of certainty by ideas, and the "method of certainty by reason;" in answer to my saying, I can find no opposition between them: which opposition, according to the account you give of it, after forty pages spent in it, amounts at last to this:

(1.) That I affirm, that general principles and maxims of reason are of little or no use; and your lordship says, "they are of very great use, and the only proper "foundation of certainty." To which I crave leave to say, that if by principles and maxims your lordship means all self-evident propositions, our ways are even in this part the same; for as you know, my lord, I make self-evident propositions necessary to certainty, and found all certainty only in them. If by principles and maxims you mean a select number of self-evident propositions, distinguished from the rest by the name maxims, which is the ſenſe in which I uſe the term maxims in my Eſſay; then to bring it to a deciſion, which of us two, in this point, is in the right, it will be neceſſary for your lordſhip to give a liſt of thoſe maxims; and then to ſhow, that a man can be certain of no truth, without the help of thoſe maxims. For to affirm maxims to be the only foundations of certainty, and yet not to tell which are thoſe maxims, or how they may be known; is, I humbly conceive, ſo far from laying any ſure grounds of certainty, that it leaves even the very foundations of it uncertain. When your lordſhip has thus ſettled the grounds of your way of certainty by reaſon, one may be able to examine, whether it be truly the way of reaſon, and how far my way of certainty by ideas differs from it.

(2.) The ſecond difference that you aſſign, between my way of certainty by ideas, and yours by reaſon, is, that "I ſay, that demonſtration is by way of intuition "of ideas, and that reaſon is only the faculty employed "in diſcovering and comparing ideas with themſelves, "or with others intervening; and that this is the only "way of certainty." Whereas your lordſhip "affirms, "and, as you ſay, have proved that there can be no "demonſtration by intuition of ideas; but that all the "certainty we can attain to, is from general principles "of reaſon, and neceſſary deductions made from them." Anſw. I have ſaid, that demonſtration conſiſts in the perception of the agreement or diſagreement of the intermediate idea, with thoſe whoſe agreement or diſagreement it is to ſhow, in each ſtep of the demonſtration: and if you will ſay this is different from the way of demonſtration by reaſon, it will then be to the point above-mentioned, which you have been ſo long upon. If this be your meaning here, it ſeems pretty ſtrangely expreſſed, and remains to be proved: but if any thing elſe be your meaning, that meaning not being the propoſition to be proved, it matters not whether you have proved it or no.

Your lordſhip farther ſays here, "that all the cer-"tainty we can attain to, is from general principles of "reaſon, and neceſſary deductions made from them."

This,

This, you say, "you have proved." What has been proved, is to be seen in what has been already considered. But if your proof, "that all the certainty we can "attain to, is from general principles of reason, and "necessary deductions made from them," were as clear and cogent, as it seems to me the contrary; this will not reach to the point in debate, till your lordship has proved, that this is opposite to my way of certainty by ideas. It is strange (and perhaps to some may be matter of thought) that in an argument wherein you lay so much stress on maxims, general principles of reason, and necessary deductions from them, you should never once tell us, what, in your account, a maxim or general principle of reason is, nor the marks it is to be known by; nor offer to show what a necessary deduction is, nor how it is to be made, or may be known. For I have seen men please themselves with deductions upon deductions, and spin consequences, it mattered not whether out of their own or other men's thoughts; which, when looked into, were visibly nothing but mere ropes of sand.

It is true, your lordship says, "you now come to "certainty of reason by deductions." But when all that truly learned discourse, which follows, is read over and over again, I would be glad to be told, what it is your lordship calls a necessary deduction; and by what criterion you distinguish it from such deductions as come short of certainty, or even of truth itself. I confess I have read over those pages more than once, and can find no such criterion laid down in them by your lordship, though a criterion be there much talked of. But whether it be my want of capacity for your way of writing, that makes me not find any light given by your lordship into this matter; or whether in truth you have not showed, wherein what you call a necessary deduction consists, and how it may be known from what is not so; the reader must judge. This I crave leave to say, that when you have shown what general principles of reason and necessary deductions are, the world will then see, and not till then, whether this your way of certainty by reason, from general principles and necessary deductions made from them, be oppoſite to, or ſo much as different from, my way of certainty by ideas; which was the thing to be ſhown.

In the paragraph under conſideration, you blame me, that in my chapter concerning reaſon I have treated it only as a faculty, and not in the other ſenſes which I there give of that word. This exception to my book, is, I ſuppoſe, only from your lordſhip's general care of letting nothing paſs in my Eſſay, which you think needs an amendment. For any particular reaſon, that brings it in here, or ties it on to this part of your diſcourſe, I confeſs I do not ſee. However, to this I anſwer,

1. The underſtanding as a faculty, being the ſubject of my Eſſay, it carried me to treat directly of reaſon no otherwiſe than as a faculty. But yet reaſon as ſtanding for true and clear principles, and alſo as ſtanding for clear and fair deductions from thoſe principles, I have not wholly omitted; as is manifeſt from what I have ſaid of ſelf-evident propoſitions, intuitive knowledge, and demonſtration, in other parts of my Eſſay. So that your queſtion, "why in a chapter of reaſon are the two "other ſenſes of the word neglected?" blaming me for no other fault that I am really guilty of, but want of order, and not putting every thing in its proper place; does not appear to be of ſo mighty weight, but that I ſhould have thought it might have been left to the little nibblers in controverſy, without being made uſe of by ſo great a man as your lordſhip. But the putting things out of their proper place, being that which your lordſhip thinks fit to except againſt in my writings, it ſo falls out, that to this too I plead not guilty. For in that very chapter of reaſon, I have not omitted to treat of principles and deductions; and what I have ſaid there, I preſume is enough to let others ſee, that I have not neglected to declare my poor ſenſe about ſelf-evident propoſitions, and the cogency and evidence of demonſtrative or probable deductions of reaſon: though what I have ſaid there, not being backed with authorities, nor warranted by the names of ancient philoſophers, was not worth your lordſhip's taking notice of.

§ 2, 3, 4, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18.

I have

I have, I confess, been so unwary to write out of my own thoughts, which your lordship has, more than once, with some sort of reprimand taken notice of. I own it, your lordship is much in the right; the safer way is, never to declare one's own sense in any material point. If I had filled my book with quotations and collections of other men's opinions, it had shown much more learning, and had much more security in it; and I myself had been safe from the attacks of the men of arms, in the commonwealth of letters: but in writing my book, I had no thoughts of war, my eye was fixed only on truth, and that with so sincere and unbiassed an endeavour, that I thought I should not have incurred much blame, even where I had missed it. This I perceive, too late, was the wrong way: I should have kept myself still safe upon the reserve. Had I learnt this wisdom of Thraso in Terence, and resolved with myself, "Hic "ergo ero post principia;" perhaps I might have preserved the commendation was given him, "illuc est "sapere ut hos instruxit ipsus sibi cavit loco." But I deserved to be soundly corrected, for not having profited by reading so much as this comes to.

But to return to your accusation here, which all together stands thus: "why in a chapter of reason are "the other two senses neglected? We might have ex- "pected here full satisfaction as to the principles of "reason, as distinct from the faculty, but the author of "the Essay wholly avoids it." What I guess these words accuse me to have avoided, I think I have shown already that I did not avoid.

"Before you conclude, you say you must observe "that I prove, that demonstration must be by intuition, "in an extraordinary manner from the sense of the "word." He that will be at the pains to read that paragraph which you quote for it, will see that I do not prove that it must be by intuition, because it is called demonstration; but that it is called demonstration, because it is by intuition. And as to the propriety of it, what your lordship says in the following words, "it would be most proper "for ocular demonstration or by the finger," will not hinder hinder it from being proper alſo in mental demonſtration, as long as the perception of the mind is properly expreſſed by ſeeing.

Essay, b. iv. c. 2. § 3.

Againſt my obſerving, that the notation of the word imported ſhowing or making to ſee, your lordſhip farther ſays, "demonſtration among ſome philoſophers "ſignified only the concluſion of an argument, whereby "we are brought from ſomething we did perceive to "ſomething we did not;" which ſeems to me to agree with what I ſay in the caſe, viz. that by the agreement of ideas which we do perceive, we are brought to perceive the agreement of ideas which before we did not perceive. To which no doubt will be anſwered, as in a like caſe, "not by a way of intuition, but by a de-"duction of reaſon," i. e. we perceive not in a way that affords us intuition or a ſight, but by deductions of reaſon, wherein we ſee nothing. Whereas, my lord, I humbly conceive, that the force of a deduction of reaſon conſiſts in this, that in each ſtep of it we ſee what a connexion it has, i. e. have an intuition of the certain agreement or diſagreement of the ideas, as in demonſtration; or an intuition or perception, that they have a probable, or not ſo much as a probable connexion, as in other deductions of reaſon.

You farther overthrow the neceſſity of intuitive knowledge, in every ſtep of a demonſtration, by the authority of Ariſtotle; who ſays, "things that are ſelf-evident "cannot be demonſtrated." And ſo ſay I too, in ſeveral places of my Eſſay. When your lordſhip can ſhow any inconſiſtency between theſe two propoſitions, viz. "that "intuitive knowledge is neceſſary in each "ſtep of a demonſtration, and things that are ſelf-"evident cannot be demonſtrated;" then I ſhall own you have overthrown the neceſſity of intuition in every ſtep of a demonſtration by reaſon, as well as by Ariſtotle's authority.

B. iv. c. 7. § 10, 19, and elſewhere.

B. iv. c. 2.

In the remainder of this paragraph, I meet with nothing but your lordſhip finding fault with ſome, who, in this age, have made uſe of mathematical demonſtrations in natural philoſophy. Your lordſhip's two reasons against this way of advancing knowledge upon the sure grounds of mathematical demonstration, are these:

ſons

(1.) "That Des Cartes, a mathematical man, has been guilty of mistakes in his system." Answ. When mathematical men will build systems upon fancy, and not upon demonstration, they are as liable to mistakes as others. And that Des Cartes was not led into his mistakes by mathematical demonstrations, but for want of them, I think has been demonstrated by * some of those mathematicians who seem to be meant here.

(2.) Your second argument against accommodating mathematics to the nature of material things, is, "that "mathematicians cannot be certain of the manner and "degrees of force given to bodies, so far distant as the "fixed stars; nor of the laws of motion in other sys-"tems." A very good argument why they should not proceed demonstratively in this our system upon laws of motion, observed to be established here: a reason that may persuade us to put out our eyes, for fear they should mislead us in what we do see, because there be things out of our sight.

It is great pity Aristotle had not understood mathematics as well as Mr. Newton, and made use of it in natural philosophy with as good success: his example had then authorized the accommodating of it to material things. But it is not to be ventured, by a man of this age, to go out of the method which Aristotle has prescribed, and which your lordship, out of him, has set down in the following pages, as that which should be kept to: for it is a dangerous presumption to go out of a track chalked out by that supposed dictator in the commonwealth of letters, though it led him to the eternity of the world. I say not this, that I do not think him a very great man; he made himself so, by not keeping precisely to beaten tracks: which servile subjection of the mind, if we may take my lord Bacon's word for it, kept the little knowledge the world had, from growing greater, for more than a few ages. That the breaking looſe from it in this age, is a fault, is not directly ſaid; but there is enough ſaid, to ſhow there is no great approbation of ſuch a liberty. Mathematics in groſs, it is plain, are a grievance in natural philoſophy, and with reaſon: for mathematical proofs, like diamonds, are hard as well as clear, and will be touched with nothing but ſtrict reaſoning. Mathematical proofs are out of the reach of topical arguments, and are not to be attacked by the equivocal uſe of words or declamation, that make ſo great a part of other diſcourſes; nay, even of controverſies. How well you have proved my way of ideas guilty of any tendency to ſcepticiſm, the reader will ſee; but this I will crave leave to ſay, that the ſecluding mathematical reaſoning from philoſophy, and inſtead thereof reducing it to Ariſtotelian rules and ſayings, will not be thought to be much in favour of knowledge againſt ſcepticiſm.

* Mr. Newton Phil. Natur. Princip. Mathemat. l. 2. § 9.

the

Your lordſhip indeed ſays, "you did not by any means "take off from the laudable endeavours of thoſe, who "have gone about to reduce natural ſpeculations to "mathematical certainty." What can we underſtand by this, but your lordſhip's great complaiſance and moderation? who, notwithſtanding you ſpend four pages to "ſhow that the endeavours of mathematical men, to "accommodate the principles of that ſcience to the "nature of material things, has been the occaſion of "great miſtakes in the philoſophy of this age;" and that therefore Ariſtotle's method is to be followed: yet you make this compliment to the mathematicians, that you leave them to their liberty to go on, if they pleaſe, "in their laudable endeavours to reduce natural ſpecu-"lations to mathematical certainty."

And thus we are come to the end of your lordſhip's clearing this paſſage: "that you grant that by ſenſa-"tion and reflexion we come to know the powers and "properties of things: but our reaſon [i. e. the prin-"ciples of reaſon agreed on by mankind] is ſatisfied, "that there muſt be ſomething beyond theſe; becauſe "it is impoſſible they ſhould ſubſiſt by themſelves: ſo "that the nature of things properly belongs to reaſon "[i. e. the principles of reaſon agreed on by mankind]

"and

" and not to mere ideas." Which if any one be so lucky as to understand by these your lordship's fifty pages spent upon it, better than my friend did, when he confessed himself gravelled by it, as it stands here recited, he ought to enjoy the advantage of his happy genius, whilst I miss that satisfaction by the dulness of mine; which hinders me also from seeing how the opposition of the way of certainty by ideas, and the way of certainty by reason, comes in, in the explication of this passage: or at least, if it does belong to it, yet I must own, what is a greater misfortune, that I do not see what the opposition or difference is, which your lordship has so much talked of, between the way of certainty by ideas, and the method of certainty by reason. For my excuse, I think others will be as much in the dark as I, since you no-where tell wherein yourself, my lord, place certainty. So that to talk of a difference between certainty by ideas, and certainty that is not by ideas, without declaring in what that other certainty consists; is like to have no better success, than might be expected from one who would compare two things together, the one whereof is not known.

You now return to your discourse of nature and person, and tell me, that to what you said about the general nature in distinct individuals, I object these three things;

(1.) " That I cannot put together one and the same " and distinct." This I own to be my objection; " and consequently there is no foundation for the dis- " tinction of nature and person." This, with submission, I deny to be any objection of mine, either in the place quoted by your lordship, or any where else. There may be foundation enough for distinction, as there is of these two, and yet they may be treated of in a way so obscure, so confused, or perhaps so sublime, that an ordinary capacity may not from thence get, as your lordship expresses it, " clear and distinct apprehensions " of them." This was that which my friend and I complained of in that place, want of clearness in your lordship's discourse, not of want of distinction in the things themselves.

(2.) " That

(2.) " That what your lordſhip ſaid about common " nature, and particular ſubſtance in individuals, was " wholly unintelligible to me and my friends." To which, my lord, you may add if you pleaſe, that it is ſtill ſo to me.

(3.) That I ſaid, " that to ſpeak truly and preciſely " of this matter as in reality it is, there is no ſuch thing " as one and the ſame common nature in ſeveral indi- " viduals; for all that in truth is in them, is particu- " lar, and nothing but particular," &c. Anſw. This was ſaid, to ſhow how unapt theſe expreſſions, " the " ſame common nature in ſeveral individuals, and ſeve- " ral individuals being in the ſame common nature; " were to give true and clear notions of nature." To this your lordſhip anſwers, that other, and thoſe very rational men, have ſpoken ſo: to which I ſhall ſay no more, but that it is an argument, with which any thing may be defended, and all the jargon of the ſchools be juſtified; but, I preſume, not ſtrong enough to bring it back again, let men ever ſo rational make uſe of it.

Your lordſhip adds, " but now, it ſeems, nothing is " intelligible but what ſuits with the new way of ideas." My lord, the new way of ideas, and the old way of ſpeaking intelligibly, was always, and ever will be the ſame. And if I may take the liberty to declare my ſenſe of it, herein it conſiſts: (1.) That a man uſe no words but ſuch as he makes the ſigns of certain determined objects of his mind in thinking, which he can make known to another. (2.) Next, that he uſe the ſame word ſteadily for the ſign of the ſame immediate object of his mind in thinking. (3.) That he join thoſe words together in propoſitions, according to the grammatical rules of that language he ſpeaks in. (4.) That he unite thoſe ſentences in a coherent diſcourſe. Thus, and thus only, I humbly conceive, any one may preſerve himſelf from the confines and ſuſpicion of jargon, whether he pleaſes to call thoſe immediate objects of his mind, which his words do or ſhould ſtand for, ideas or no.

You again accuſe the way of ideas, to make a common nature no more than a common name. That, my lord, lord, is not my way by ideas. When your lordſhip ſhows me where I have ſaid ſo, I promiſe your lordſhip to ſtrike it out: and the like I promiſe, when you ſhow me where "I preſume that we are not to judge of "things by the general principles of reaſon," which you call my fundamental miſtake. "Theſe principles "of reaſon, you ſay, muſt be the ſtandard to man-"kind." If they are of ſuch conſequence, would it not have been convenient we ſhould have been inſtructed ſomething more particularly about them, than by barely being told their name; that we might be able to know what are, and what are not principles of reaſon?

But be they what they will, becauſe they muſt be the ſtandard to mankind, your lordſhip ſays, "you ſhall in "this debate proceed upon the following principles, to "make it appear that the difference between nature and "perſon is not imaginary and fictitious, but grounded "upon the real nature of things." With ſubmiſſion, my lord, you need not be at the pains to draw up your great artillery of ſo many maxims, where you meet with no oppoſition. The thing in debate, whether in this debate or no, I know not, but what led into this debate, was about the expreſſions, "one common nature in "ſeveral individuals, and ſeveral individuals in one "common nature:" and the queſtion, I thought, was, whether a general or common nature could be in particulars, i. e. exiſt in individuals? But ſince your lordſhip turns your artillery againſt thoſe who deny that there is any foundation of diſtinction between nature and perſon, I am out of gun-ſhot; for I am none of thoſe, who ever ſaid or thought there was no foundation of diſtinction between nature and perſon.

The maxims you lay down in the following paragraph, are to make me underſtand how one and the ſame and diſtinct may conſiſt; I confeſs, I do not ſee how your lordſhip's words there at all make it out. This, indeed, I do underſtand, that ſeveral particular beings may have a conformity in them to one general abſtract idea, which may, if you pleaſe, be called their general or common nature: but how that idea or general nature can be the ſame and diſtinct, is ſtill paſt my comprehenſion.

To

To my ſaying, that your lordſhip had not told me what nature is, I am told, that "if I had a mind to "underſtand you, I could not but ſee, that by nature "you meant the ſubject of eſſential properties." A lady aſking a learned phyſician what the ſpleen was, received this anſwer, that it was the receptacle of the melancholy humour. She had a mind to underſtand what the ſpleen was, but by this definition of it found herſelf not much enlightened; and therefore went on to aſk, what the melancholy humour was: and by the doctor's anſwer found that the ſpleen and the melancholy humour had a relation one to the other; but what the ſpleen was, ſhe knew not one jot better than ſhe did before he told her any thing about it. My lord, relative definitions of terms that are not relative, uſually do no more than lead us in a circuit to the ſame place from whence we ſet out, and there leave us in the ſame ignorance we were in at firſt. So I fear it would fall out with me here, if I, willing as I am to underſtand what your lordſhip means by nature, ſhould go to aſk what you mean by eſſential properties.

The three or four next pages, I hope, your lordſhip does not think contain any ſerious anſwer to what my friend ſaid concerning Peter, James, and John; and as for the pleaſantry of your countryman, I ſhall not pretend to meddle with that, ſince your lordſhip, who knows better than any body his way of chopping of logic, was fain to give it off, becauſe it was growing too rough. What work ſuch a dangerous chopper of logic would make, with an argument that ſuppoſed the names Peter, James, and John, to ſtand for men; and then without ſcruple affirmed, that the nature of man was in them; if he were let looſe upon it: who can tell? Eſpecially if he might have the liberty ſtrenuouſly to uſe the phraſe "for his life," and to obſerve what a turn the chiming of words, without determined ideas annexed to them, gives to the underſtanding, when they are gone deep into a man's head, and paſs there for things.

To ſhow that the common or general nature of man could not be in Peter or James, I alleged, that whatever ever existed (as whatever was in Peter or James did) was particular; and that it confounded my understanding, to make a general a particular. In answer, your lordship tells me, that, to make me understand this, you had told me in your answer to my first letter, "that "we are to consider beings as God had ordered them "in their several sorts and ranks," &c. And thereupon you ask me, "why it was not answered in the "proper place for it?" Answ. I own I was not always so fortunate, as to say things in that, which your lordship thinks the proper place; but having been rebuked for repetitions, I thought your lordship could not be ignorant, that "I had considered beings as God had "ordered them in their several sorts and ranks," &c. since you could not but have read these words of mine: "I would not here be thought to forget, "much less to deny, that nature in the "production of things makes several of "them alike. There is nothing more obvious, espe- "cially in the races of animals, and all things propa- "gated by seed," &c. And I have expressed my sense in this point so fully here, and in other places, particularly b. iii. c. 6. that I dare leave it to my reader, without any farther explication. Essay, b. iii. c. 3. § 13.

Your lordship farther asks, "Is not that a real na- "ture, which is the subject of real properties? And is "not the nature really in those who have the essential "properties?" I answer to both those questions, Yes; such as is the reality of the subject, such is the reality of its properties: the abstract general idea is really in the mind of him that has it, and the properties that it has are really and inseparably annexed to it; let this reality be whatever your lordship pleases: but this will never prove, that this general nature exists in Peter or James. Those properties, with submission, do not, as your lordship supposes, exist in Peter and James: those qualities indeed may exist in them, which your lordship calls properties; but they are not properties in either of them, but are properties only of that specific abstract nature, which Peter and James, for their supposed conformity to it, are ranked under. For example, rationality, as much a property as it is of a man, is no property of Peter. He was rational a good part of his life, could write and read, and was a ſharp fellow at a bargain; but about thirty, a knock ſo altered him, that for theſe twenty years paſt he has been able to do none of theſe things: there is to this day not ſo much appearance of reaſon in him, as in his horſe or monkey, and yet he is Peter ſtill.

Your lordſhip aſks, "Is not that a real nature, that "is the ſubject of real properties? And is not that na- "ture really in thoſe who have the ſame eſſential pro- "perties?" Give me leave, I beſeech you, to aſk, are not thoſe diſtinct real natures, that are the ſubjects of diſtinct eſſential properties? For example, that the nature of an animal is the ſubject of eſſential properties of an animal, with the excluſion of thoſe of a man or a horſe; for elſe the nature of an animal, and the nature of a man, and the nature of a horſe, would be the ſame: and ſo, where-ever the ſubject of the eſſential properties of an animal is, there alſo would be the ſubject of the eſſential properties of a man, and of a horſe: and ſo, in effect, whatever is an animal, would be a man: the real nature of an animal, and the real nature of a man, being the ſame. To avoid this, there is no other way (if this reality your lordſhip builds ſo much on, be any thing beyond the reality of two abſtract diſtinct ideas in the mind) but that there be one real nature of an animal, the ſubject of the eſſential properties of an animal; and another real nature of a man, the ſubject of the eſſential properties of a man: both which real natures muſt be in Peter, to make him a man. So that every individual man or beaſt muſt, according to this account, have two real natures in him, to make him what he is: nay, if this be ſo, two will not ſerve the turn. Bucephalus muſt have the real nature of ens or being, and the real nature of body, and the real nature of vivens, and the real nature of animal, and the real nature of a horſe; i. e. five diſtinct real natures in him, to make him Bucephalus: for theſe are all really diſtinct common natures, whereof one is not the ſubject of preciſely the ſame eſſential properties as the other. This, though very hard to my underſtanding, muſt be really ſo, if every diſtinct, common, or general nature, be a real being, that really exiſts any where, but in the underſtanding: " common nature, " taken in my way of ideas, your lordſhip truly ſays, " will not make me underſtand ſuch a common nature " as you ſpeak of, which ſubſiſts in ſeveral individuals, " becauſe I can have no ideas of real ſubſtances, but " ſuch as are particular; all others are only abſtract " ideas, and made only by the act of the mind." But what your lordſhip farther promiſes there, I find, to my ſorrow, does not hold, viz. that in your lordſhip's way (as far as you have diſcovered it) which you call " the way of reaſon, I may come to a better underſtand- " ing of this matter."

Your lordſhip in the next paragraph declares yourſelf really aſhamed to be put to explain theſe things, that which you had ſaid being ſo very plain and eaſy: and yet I am not aſhamed to own, " that for my life" I cannot underſtand them, as they are now farther explained. Your lordſhip thinks it proved, that every common nature is a real being: let it be ſo, that it is the ſubject of real properties, and that thereby it is demonſtrated to be a real being; this makes it harder for me to conceive, that this common nature of a man, which is a real being, and but one, ſhould yet be really in Peter, in James, and in John. Had Amphitruo been able to conceive this, he had not been ſo much puzzled, or thought Soſia to talk idly, when he told him, " domi ego ſum inquam & apud te adſum Soſia " idem." For the common nature of man, is a real being, as your lordſhip ſays, and Soſia is no more: and he that can conceive any one and the ſame real being to be in divers places at once, can have no difficulty to conceive it of another real being. And ſo Soſia may at the ſame time be at home, and with his maſter abroad: and Amphitruo might have been aſhamed to demand the explication of ſo plain a matter; or at leaſt, if he had ſtuck a little at here and there too, ought he not to have been ſatisfied, as ſoon as Soſia had told him, I am another diſtinct I, here, from the ſame I, that I am there? Which, no doubt, Sofia could have made out: let your lordſhip's countryman chop logic with him, and try whether he cannot. Countryman. But how is it poſſible, Sofia, that thou the real ſame, as thou ſayeſt, ſhouldſt be at home and here too? Sofia. Very eaſily, becauſe I am really the ſame, and yet diſtinct. Countryman. How can this be? Sofia. By a trick that I have. Countryman. Canſt thou teach me the trick? Sofia. Yes: it is but for thee to get a particular ſubſiſtence proper to thy real ſelf at home, and another particular ſubſiſtence proper to thy ſame real ſelf abroad, and the buſineſs is done: thou wilt then eaſily be the ſame real thing, and diſtinct from thyſelf; and thou mayeſt be in as many places together, as thou canſt get particular ſubſiſtences, and be ſtill the ſame one real being. Countryman. But what is that particular ſubſiſtence? Sofia. Hold ye, hold ye, friend, that's the ſecret! I thought once it was a particular exiſtence, but that I find is an ineffectual drug, and will not do: every one ſees it will not make the ſame real being diſtinct from itſelf, nor bring it into two different places at once, and therefore it is laid aſide, and ſubſiſtence is taken to do the feat. Countryman. Exiſtence my boy's ſchoolmaſter made me underſtand, the other day, when my gray mare foaled. For he told me that a horſe, that never was before, began then to exiſt; and when the poor foal died, he told me the ſame horſe ceaſed to exiſt. Sofia. But did he tell thee what became of the real common nature of an horſe, that was in it, when the foal died? Countryman. No: but this I know, that my real horſe was really deſtroyed. Sofia. There's now thy ignorance! So much of thy horſe as had a real exiſtence, was really deſtroyed, that's true: but there was ſomething in thy horſe, which having a real particular ſubſiſtence, was not deſtroyed: nay, and the beſt part of thy horſe too; for it was that, which had in it all thoſe properties that made thy horſe better than a broomſtick. Countryman. Thou tell'ſt me wonders of this ſame ſubſiſtence; what, I pray thee, is it? Sofia. I beg your pardon for that; it is the very philoſopher's ſtone: thoſe who are adepti, and can do strange things with it, are wiser than to tell what it is. Countryman. Where may it be bought then? Sofia. That I know not: but I will tell thee where thou mayst meet with it. Countryman. Where? Sofia. In some of the shady thickets of the schoolmen; and it is worth the looking after. For if particular subsistence has such a power over a real being, as to make one and the same real being to be distinct, and in divers places at once, it may perhaps be able to give thee an account what becomes of that real nature of thy horse after thy horse is dead; and if thou canst but find whither that retires, who knows but thou mayst get as useful a thing as thy horse again? since to that real nature of thy horse inseparably adhere the shape and motion, and other properties of thy horse.

ſtrange

I hope, my lord, your countryman will not be displeased to have met with Sofia to chop logic with, who, I think, has made it as intelligible, how his real self might be the same and distinct, and be really in distinct places at once, by the help of a particular subsistence proper to him in each place; as it is intelligible how any real being under the name of a common nature, or under any other name bestowed upon it, may be the same and distinct, and really be in divers places at once, by the help of a particular subsistence proper to each of those distinct sames. At least, if I may answer for myself, I understand one as well as the other: and if my head be turned from common sense (as I find your lordship very apt to think) so that it is great news to you that I understand any thing; if in my way of ideas I cannot understand words, that appear to me either to stand for no ideas, or to be so joined, that they put inconsistent ideas together; I think your lordship uses me right, to turn me off for desperate, and "leave me, as you do, to the reader's understand-"ing."

To your lordship's many questions concerning men and drills, in the paragraph where you begin to explain what my friend and I found difficult in your discourse concerning person; I answer, that these two names, man and drill, are perfectly arbitrary, whether founded on real distinct properties or no: so perfectly arbitrary, that, if men had pleased, drill might have stood for what man now does, and vice versa. I answer farther, that these two names stand for two abstract ideas, which are (to those who know what they mean by these two names) the distinct essences of two distinct kinds; and as particular existences, or things existing are found by men (who know what they mean by these names) to agree to either of those ideas, which these names stand for; these names respectively are applied to those particular things, and the things said to be of that kind. This I have so fully and at large explained in my Essay, that I should have thought it needless to have said any thing again of it here, had it not been to show my readiness to answer any questions you shall be pleased to ask concerning any thing I have writ, which your lordship either finds difficult, or has forgot.

In the next place, your lordship comes to clear what you had said in answer to this question put by yourself, "what is this distinction of Peter, James, and "John founded upon?" To which you answered, "that "they may be distinguished from each other by our "senses, as to difference of features, distance of "place, &c. But that is not all; for supposing "there was no external difference, yet there is a differ-"ence between them, as several individuals in the "same common nature." These words when my friend and I came to consider, we owned, as your lordship here takes notice, that we could understand no more by them but this, "that the ground of distinction between "several individuals, in the same common nature, is, "that they are several individuals in the same common "nature." Hereupon your lordship tells me, "the "question now is, what this distinction is founded up-"on? whether on our observing the difference of "features, distance of place, &c. or on some antece-"dent ground."

Pursuant hereunto, as if this were the question, you in the next paragraph (as far as I can understand it) make the ground of the distinction between these individuals, or the "principium individuationis," to be the

the union of the ſoul and body. But with ſubmiſſion, my lord, the queſtion is, whether I and my friend were to blame, becauſe when your lordſhip, in the words above-cited, having removed all other grounds of diſtinction, ſaid, " there was yet a difference between " Peter and James, as ſeveral individuals in the ſame " common nature;" we could underſtand no more by it, but " this, that the ground of diſtinction between " ſeveral individuals in the ſame common nature, is, " that they are ſeveral individuals in the ſame common " nature."

Let the ground that your lordſhip now aſſigns of the diſtinction of individuals be what it will, or let what you ſay be as clear as you pleaſe, viz. that the ground of their diſtinction is in the union of ſoul and body; it will, I humbly conceive, be nevertheleſs true, that what you ſaid before might amount to no more but this, " that the ground of the diſtinction between ſeveral in- " dividuals in the ſame common nature, is, that they " are ſeveral individuals in the ſame common nature:" and therefore we might not be to blame for ſo underſtanding it. For the words which our underſtandings were then employed about, were thoſe which you had there ſaid, and not thoſe which you would ſay five months after: though I muſt own, that thoſe which your lordſhip here ſays concerning the diſtinction of individuals, leave it as much in the dark to me as what you ſaid before. But perhaps I do not underſtand your lordſhip's words right, becauſe I conceive that the " principium individuationis" is the ſame in all the ſeveral ſpecies of creatures, men as well as others; and therefore if the union of ſoul and body be that which diſtinguiſhes two individuals in the human ſpecies one from another, I know not how two cherries, or two atoms of matter, can be diſtinct individuals; ſince I think there is in them no union of a ſoul and body. And upon this ground it will be very hard to tell what made the ſoul and the body individuals (as certainly they were) before their union.

But I ſhall leave what your lordſhip ſays concerning this matter to the examination of thoſe, whoſe health and leiſure allow them more time than I have for this weighty queſtion, wherein the diſtinction of two men or two cherries conſiſts: for fear I ſhould make your lordſhip's countryman a little wonder again, to find a grave philoſopher make a ſerious queſtion of it.

To your next paragraph, I anſwer, that if the true idea of a perſon, or the true ſignification of the word perſon lies in this, that ſuppoſing there was no other difference in the ſeveral individuals of the ſame kind, yet there is a difference between them as ſeveral individuals in the ſame common nature; it will follow from hence, that the name perſon will agree to Bucephalus and Podargus, as well as to Alexander and Hector. But whether this conſequence will agree with what your lordſhip ſays concerning perſon in another place, I am not concerned; I am only anſwerable for this conſequence.

Your lordſhip is pleaſed here to call my endeavour to find out the meaning of your words, as you had put them together, "trifling exceptions." To which I muſt ſay, that I am heartily ſorry, that either my underſtanding, or your lordſhip's way of writing obliges me ſo often to ſuch trifling. I cannot, as I have ſaid, anſwer to what I do not underſtand; and I hope here my trifling, in ſearching out your lordſhip's meaning, was not much out of the way, becauſe I think every one will ſee by the ſteps I took, that the ſenſe I found out by it, was that which your words implied; and your lordſhip does not diſown it, but only replies, that I ſhould not have drawn that which was the natural conſequence from it, becauſe that conſequence would not well conſiſt with what you had ſaid in another place.

What your lordſhip adds farther to clear your ſaying, "that an individual intelligent ſubſtance is rather "ſuppoſed to the making of a perſon than the proper "definition of it;" though in your definition of perſon you put a complete intelligent ſubſtance: may have its effect upon others underſtandings; but I muſt ſuffer under the ſhort-ſightedneſs of my own, who neither underunderstood it as it stood in your first answer, nor do I now as it is explained in your second.

Your lordship being here, as you say, come to the end of this debate, I should here have ended too; and it was time, my letter being grown already to too great a bulk: but I being engaged by promise to answer some things in your first letter, which in my reply to it I had omitted, I come now to them, and shall endeavour to give your lordship satisfaction in those points; though to make room for them I leave out a great deal that I had writ in answer to this your lordship's second letter. And if after all my answer seems too long, I must beg your lordship and my reader to excuse it, and impute it to those occasions of length, which I have mentioned in more places than one, as they have occurred.

The original and main question between your lordship and me, being, "whether there were any thing "in my Essay repugnant to the doctrine of the Tri-"nity?" I endeavoured, by examining the grounds and manner of your lordship's bringing my book into that controversy, to bring that question to a decision. And therefore in my answer to your lordship's first letter, I insisted particularly on what had a relation to that point. This method your lordship in your second letter censured, as if it contained only personal matters, which were fit to be laid aside. And by mixing new matter and charging my book with new accusations before the first was made out, avoided the decision of what was in debate between us; a strong presumption to me that your lordship had little to say to support what began the controversy, which you were so willing to have me let fall; whilst on the other side, my silence to other points which I had promised an answer to, was often reflected on, and I rebuked for not answering in the proper place.

Your lordship's calling upon me on this occasion shall not be lost; it is fit your expectation should be satisfied, and your objections considered; which, for the reasons above-mentioned, were not examined in my former answer: and which whether true or false, as I humbly conceive, conceive, make nothing for or againſt the doctrine of the Trinity. I ſhall therefore conſider them barely as ſo many philoſophical queſtions, and endeavour to ſhow your lordſhip where and upon what grounds it is I ſtick; and what it is that hinders me from the ſatisfaction it would be to me to be in every one of them of your mind.

Your lordſhip tells me, p. 7, "whether I do own ſubſtance or not, is not the point before us; but whether by virtue of theſe principles I can come to any certainty of reaſon about it. And your lordſhip ſays, "the very places I produce do prove the contrary; "which you ſhall therefore ſet down in my own words, "both as to corporeal and ſpiritual ſubſtances."

Here again, my lord, I muſt beg your pardon, that I do not diſtinctly comprehend your meaning in theſe words, viz. "that by virtue of theſe principles one "cannot come to certainty of reaſon about ſubſtance:" for it is not very clear to me, whether your lordſhip means, that we cannot come to certainty, that there is ſuch a thing in the world as ſubſtance; or whether we cannot make any other propoſition about ſubſtance, of which we can be certain; or whether we cannot by my principles eſtabliſh any idea of ſubſtance of which we can be certain. For to come to certainty of reaſon about ſubſtance may ſignify either of theſe, which are far different propoſitions: and I ſhall waſte your lordſhip's time, my reader's, and my own (neither of which would I willingly do) by taking it in one ſenſe, when you mean it in another, leſt it ſhould meet with ſome ſuch repoof as this: that "I miſrepreſent your meaning, or might have underſtood it, if I had a mind "to it," &c. And therefore cannot but wiſh that you had ſo far condeſcended to the ſlowneſs of my apprehenſion as to give me your ſenſe ſo determined, that I might not trouble you with anſwers to what was not your preciſe meaning.

To avoid it in the preſent caſe, and to find in what ſenſe I was here to take theſe words, "come to no certainty of reaſon about ſubſtance," I looked into what followed, and when I came to the 13th page, I thought I had

I had there got a clear explication of your lordſhip's meaning; and that by no certainty of reaſon about ſubſtance your lordſhip here meant no certain idea of ſubſtance. Your lordſhip's words are, "I do not charge "them" (i. e. me, as one of the gentlemen of the new way of reaſoning) "with diſcarding the notion of ſub- "ſtance becauſe they have but an imperfect idea of it; "but becauſe upon thoſe principles there can be no "certain idea at all of it." Here I thought myſelf ſure, and that theſe words plainly interpreted the meaning of your propoſition, p. 7, to be, "that upon my "principles there can be no certain idea at all of ſub- "ſtance." But before I came to the end of that paragraph I found myſelf at a loſs again; for that paragraph goes on in theſe words: "whereas your lordſhip aſſerts "it to be one of the moſt natural and certain ideas in "our minds, becauſe it is a repugnance to our firſt "conceptions of things, that modes or accidents ſhould "ſubſiſt by themſelves; and therefore you ſaid, the "rational idea of ſubſtance is one of the firſt ideas in "our minds: and however imperfect and obſcure our "notion be, yet we are as certain that ſubſtances are "and muſt be, as that there are many beings in the "world." Here the certainty, which your words ſeem to mean, is certainty of the being of ſubſtance.

In this ſenſe therefore I ſhall take it, till your lordſhip ſhall determine it otherwiſe. And the reaſon why I take it ſo, is, becauſe what your lordſhip goes on to ſay, ſeems to me to look moſt that way. The propoſition then that your lordſhip undertakes to prove, is this, "that by virtue of my principles we cannot come "to any certainty of reaſon, that there is any ſuch thing "as ſubſtance." And your lordſhip tells me, "that "the very places I produce do prove the contrary, "which you therefore will ſet down in my own words, "both as to corporeal and ſpiritual ſubſtances."

The firſt your lordſhip brings, are theſe words of mine: "When we talk or think of any particular ſort "of corporeal ſubſtances, as horſe, ſtone, &c. though "the idea we have of either of them be but the compli- "cation or collection of thoſe ſeveral ſimple ideas of "ſenſible

" ſenſible qualities, which we uſe to find united in the " thing called horſe or ſtone; yet becauſe we cannot " conceive how they ſhould ſubſiſt alone, nor one in " another, we ſuppoſe them exiſting in, and ſupported " by ſome common ſubject; which ſupport we denote " by the name ſubſtance: though it be certain, we have " no clear and diſtinct idea of that thing we ſuppoſe a " ſupport." And again,

" The ſame happens concerning the operations of " the mind, viz. thinking, reaſoning, fearing, &c. " which we conſidering not to ſubſiſt of themſelves, " nor apprehending how they can belong to body, or " be produced by it, we are apt to think theſe the " actions of ſome other ſubſtance, which we call ſpirit; " whereby yet it is evident, that having no other idea " or notion of matter, but ſomething wherein thoſe " many ſenſible qualities, which affect our ſenſes, do " ſubſiſt; but ſuppoſing a ſubſtance, wherein think- " ing, knowing, doubting, and a power of moving, " &c. do ſubſiſt: we have as clear a notion of the na- " ture or ſubſtance of ſpirit, as we have of body; the " one being ſuppoſed to be (without knowing what it " is) the ſubſtratum to thoſe ſimple ideas we have from " without; and the other ſuppoſed (with a like igno- " rance of what it is) to be the ſubſtratum to thoſe " operations which we experiment in ourſelves."

But how theſe words prove, that " upon my princi- " ples we cannot come to any certainty of reaſon, that " there is any ſuch thing as ſubſtance in the world;" I confeſs I do not ſee, nor has your lordſhip, as I humbly conceive, ſhown. And I think it would be a hard matter from theſe words of mine to make a ſyllogiſm, whoſe concluſion ſhould be, ergo, " from my principles " we cannot come to any certainty of reaſon, that there " is any ſubſtance in the world."

Your lordſhip indeed tells me, that I ſay, " that in theſe " and the like faſhions of ſpeaking, that the ſubſtance " is always ſuppoſed ſomething;" and grant that I ſay over and over, that ſubſtance is ſuppoſed: but that, your lordſhip ſays, is not what you looked for, but ſomething in the way of certainty by reaſon.

What

What your lordſhip looks for, is not, I find, always eaſy for me to gueſs. But what I brought that, and ſome other paſſages to the ſame purpoſe for, out of my Eſſay is, that I think they prove, viz. that "I did not "diſcard, nor almoſt diſcard ſubſtance out of the rea- "ſonable world." For he that ſuppoſes in every ſpecies of material beings, ſubſtance to be always ſomething, doth not diſcard or almoſt diſcard it out of the world, or deny any ſuch thing to be. The paſſages alleged, I think, prove this; which was all I brought them for. And if they ſhould happen to prove no more, I think, you can hardly infer from thence, "that "therefore upon my principles we can come to no cer- "tainty, that there is any ſuch thing as ſubſtance in the "world."

Your lordſhip goes on to inſiſt mightily upon my ſuppoſing; and to theſe words of mine, "we cannot "conceive how theſe ſenſible qualities ſhould ſubſiſt "alone, and therefore we ſuppoſe a ſubſtance to ſup- "port them," your lordſhip replies, "it is but ſup- "poſing ſtill; becauſe we cannot conceive it other- "wiſe: but what certainty follows from not being able "to conceive?" Anſw. The ſame certainty that follows from the repugnancy to our firſt conceptions of things, upon which your lordſhip grounds the relative idea of ſubſtance. Your words are, "it is a mere effect "of reaſon, becauſe it is a repugnancy to our firſt con- "ceptions of things, that modes or accidents ſhould "ſubſiſt by themſelves." Your lordſhip then, if I underſtand your reaſoning here, concludes that there is ſubſtance, "becauſe it is a repugnancy to our concep- "tions of things" (for whether that repugnancy be to our firſt or ſecond conceptions, I think that is all one) "that modes or accidents ſhould ſubſiſt by them- "ſelves;" and I conclude the ſame thing, becauſe we cannot conceive how ſenſible qualities ſhould ſubſiſt by themſelves. Now what the difference of certainty is from a repugnancy to our conceptions, and from our not being able to conceive; I confeſs, my lord, I am not acute enough to diſcern. And therefore it ſeems to me, me, that I have laid down the ſame certainty of the being of ſubſtance, that your lordſhip has done.

Your lordſhip adds, "are there not multitudes of "things which we are not able to conceive? and yet it "would not be allowed us to ſuppoſe what we think "fit upon that account." Anſw. Your lordſhip's is certainly a very juſt rule; it is pity it does not reach the caſe. "But becauſe it is not allowed us to ſuppoſe "what we think fit in things, which we are not able to "conceive;" it does not therefore follow, that we may not with certainty ſuppoſe or infer that which is a natural and undeniable conſequence of ſuch an inability to conceive, as I call it, or repugnancy to our conceptions, as you call it. We cannot conceive the foundation of Harlem-church to ſtand upon nothing; but becauſe it is not allowed us to ſuppoſe what we think fit, viz. that it is laid upon a rock of diamond, or ſupported by fairies; yet I think all the world will allow the infallible certainty of this ſuppoſition from thence, that it reſts upon ſomething. This I take to be the preſent caſe; and therefore your next words, I think, do leſs concern Mr. L. than my lord b. of W. I ſhall ſet them down, that the reader may apply them to which of the two he thinks they moſt belong. They are, "I could hardly conceive that Mr. L. would have "brought ſuch evidence as this againſt himſelf; but I "muſt ſuppoſe ſome unknown ſubſtratum in this caſe." For theſe words, that your lordſhip has laſt quoted of mine, do not only not prove, "that upon my princi-"ples we cannot come to any certainty, that there is "any ſuch thing as ſubſtance in the world;" but prove the contrary, that there muſt certainly be ſubſtance in the world, and upon the very ſame grounds that your lordſhip takes it to be certain.

Your next paragraph, which is to the ſame purpoſe, I have read more than once, and can never forbear, as often as I read it, to wiſh myſelf young again; or that a livelineſs of fancy, ſuitable to that age, would teach me to ſport with words for the diverſion of my readers. This I find your lordſhip thinks ſo neceſſary to the quick-quickening of controverſy, that you will not truſt the debate to the greatneſs of your learning, nor the gravity of your ſubject without it, whatever authority the dignity of your character might give to what your lordſhip ſays: for you having quoted theſe words of mine: "as "long as there is any ſimple idea, or ſenſible quality "left, according to my way of arguing, ſubſtance cannot be diſcarded; becauſe all ſimple ideas, all ſenſible qualities carry with them a ſuppoſition of a ſubſtratum to exiſt in, and a ſubſtance wherein they inhere:" you add, "what is the meaning of carrying "with them a ſuppoſition of a ſubſtratum and a ſubſtance? Have theſe ſimple ideas the notion of a ſubſtance in them? No, but they carry it with them: "How ſo? Do ſenſible qualities carry a corporeal ſubſtance along with them? Then a corporeal ſubſtance "muſt be intromitted by the ſenſes together with them: "No, but they carry the ſuppoſition with them; and "truly that is burden enough for them. But which "way do they carry it? It ſeems it is only becauſe we "cannot conceive it otherwiſe: What is this conceiving? It may be ſaid it is an act of the mind, not "built on ſimple ideas, but lies in the comparing the "ideas of accident and ſubſtance together; and from "thence finding that an accident muſt carry ſubſtance "along with it: but this will not clear it; for the "ideas of accidents are ſimple ideas, and carry nothing "along with them, but the impreſſion made by ſenſible objects."

In this paſſage, I conclude, your lordſhip had ſome regard to the entertainment of that part of your readers, who would be thought men, as well by being riſible as rational creatures. For I cannot imagine you meant this for an argument: if you did, I have this plain ſimple anſwer, that, "by carrying with them a ſuppoſi"tion," I mean, according to the ordinary import of the phraſe, that ſenſible qualities imply a ſubſtratum to exiſt in. And if your lordſhip pleaſe to change one of theſe equivalent expreſſions into the other, all the argument here, I think, will be at an end: what will become of the ſport and ſmiling, I will not anſwer.

Hitherto,

Hitherto, I do not see any thing in my words brought by your lordship that proves, "that upon my princi-"ples we can come to no certainty of reason, that "there is substance in the world;" but the contrary.

Your lordship's next words are to tell the world, that my simile about the elephant and tortoise, "is to ridi-"cule the notion of substance, and the European phi-"losophers for asserting it." But if your lordship please to turn again to my Essay, you will find those passages were not intended to ridicule the notion of substance, or those who asserted it, whatever that "it" signifies: but to show, that though substance did support accidents, yet philosophers, who had found such a support necessary, had no more a clear idea of what that support was, than the Indian had of that which supported his tortoise, though sure he was it was something. Had your pen, which quoted so much of the nineteenth section of the thirteenth chapter of my second book, but set down the remaining line and a half of that paragraph, you would by these words which follow there, "so that of sub-"stance we have no idea of what it is, but only a con-"fused obscure one of what it does;" have put it past doubt what I meant. But your lordship was pleased to take only those, which you thought would serve best to your purpose; and I crave leave to add now these remaining ones, to show my reader what was mine.

B. ii. c. 19. §. 13.

It is to the same purpose I use the same illustration again in that other place, which you are pleased to cite likewise; which your lordship says you did, "only to show that it was a de-"liberate and (as I thought) lucky similitude." It was upon serious consideration, I own, that I entertained the opinion, that we had no clear and distinct idea of substance. But as to that similitude, I do not remember that it was much deliberated on; such inaccurate writers as I am, who aim at nothing but plainness, do not much study similies; and, for the fault of repetition, you have been pleased to pardon it. But supposing you had proved, that simile was to ridicule the notion of substance, published in the writings of

B. ii. c. 23. § 2.

some

ſome European philoſophers; it will by no means follow from thence, "that upon my principles we cannot "come to any certainty of reaſon, that there is any "ſuch thing as ſubſtance in the world." Men's notions of a thing may be laughed at by thoſe, whoſe principles eſtabliſh the certainty of the thing itſelf: and one may laugh at Ariſtotle's notion of an orb of fire under the ſphere of the moon, without principles that will make him uncertain whether there be any ſuch thing as fire. My ſimile did perhaps ſerve to ſhow, that there were philoſophers, whoſe knowledge was not ſo clear, nor ſo great as they pretended. If your lordſhip thereupon thought, that the vanity of ſuch a pretenſion had ſomething ridiculous in it, I ſhall not conteſt your judgment in the caſe: for, as human nature is framed, it is not impoſſible that whoever is diſcovered to pretend to know more than really he does, will be in danger to be laughed at.

In the next paragraph, your lordſhip beſtows the epithet of dull on Burgerſdicius and Sanderſon, and the tribe of logicians. I will not queſtion your right to call any body dull, whom you pleaſe: but if your lordſhip does it to inſinuate that I did ſo, I hope I may be allowed to ſay thus much in my own defence, that I am neither ſo ſtupid or ill-natured, to diſcredit thoſe whom I quote, for being of the ſame opinion with me. And he that will look into the eleventh and twelfth pages of my reply, which your lordſhip refers to, will find that I am very far from calling them dull, or ſpeaking diminiſhingly of them. But if I had been ſo ill-bred or fooliſh, as to have called them dull; I do not ſee how that does at all ſerve to prove this propoſition, "that "upon my principles we can come to no certainty of "reaſon, that there is any ſuch thing as ſubſtance;" any more than what follows in the next paragraph.

Your lordſhip in it aſks me, as if it were of ſome great importance to the propoſition to be proved, "whether "there be no difference between the bare being of a "thing, and its ſubſiſtence by itſelf." Anſw. Yes; there is a difference, as I underſtand thoſe terms: and then I beſeech your lordſhip to make uſe of it, to prove the propoſition before us. But becauſe you ſeem by this queſtion to conclude, " that the idea of a thing that " ſubſiſts by itſelf, is a clear and diſtinct idea of ſub- " ſtance;" I beg leave to aſk, is the idea of the manner of ſubſiſtence of a thing, the idea of the thing itſelf? If it be not, we may have a clear and diſtinct idea of the manner, and yet have none but a very obſcure and confuſed one of the thing. For example, I tell your lordſhip, that I know a thing that cannot ſubſiſt without a ſupport, and I know another that does ſubſiſt without a ſupport, and ſay no more of them; can you, by having the clear and diſtinct ideas of having a ſupport, and not having a ſupport, ſay, that you have a clear and diſtinct idea of the thing, that I know, which has, and of the thing, that I know, which has not a ſupport? If your lordſhip can, I beſeech you to give me the clear and diſtinct ideas of theſe, which I only call by the general name of things, that have or have not ſupports: for ſuch there are, and ſuch I ſhall give your lordſhip clear and diſtinct ideas of, when you ſhall pleaſe to call upon me for them; though I think your lordſhip will ſcarce find them by the general and confuſed idea of thing, nor in the clearer and more diſtinct idea of having or not having a ſupport.

To ſhow a blind man that he has no clear and diſtinct idea of ſcarlet, I tell him, that his notion of it, that it is a thing or being, does not prove he has any clear or diſtinct idea of it; but barely that he takes it to be ſomething, he knows not what. He replies, that he knows more than that; v. g. he knows that it ſubſiſts or inheres in another thing: " and is there no diffe- " rence, ſays he in your lordſhip's words, between the " bare being of a thing, and its ſubſiſtence in another?" Yes, ſay I to him, a great deal; they are very different ideas. But for all that, you have no clear and diſtinct idea of ſcarlet, nor ſuch a one as I have, who ſee and know it, and have another kind of idea of it beſides that of inherence.

Your lordſhip has the idea of ſubſiſting by itſelf, and therefore you conclude you have a clear and diſtinct idea of the thing that ſubſiſts by itſelf; which methinks methinks is all one, as if your countryman ſhould ſay, he hath an idea of a cedar of Lebanon, that it is a tree of a nature to need no prop to lean on for its ſupport, therefore he hath a clear and diſtinct idea of a cedar of Lebanon: which clear and diſtinct idea, when he comes to examine, is nothing but a general one of a tree, with which his indetermined idea of a cedar is confounded. Juſt ſo is the idea of ſubſtance, which, however called clear and diſtinct, is confounded with the general indetermined idea of ſomething. But ſuppoſe that the manner of ſubſiſting by itſelf gives us a clear and diſtinct idea of ſubſtance, how does that prove, "that upon my "principles we can come to no certainty of reaſon, "that there is any ſuch thing as ſubſtance in the "world?" Which is the propoſition to be proved.

In what follows, your lordſhip ſays, "you do not "charge any one with diſcarding the notion of ſub- "ſtance, becauſe he has but an imperfect idea of it; "but becauſe upon thoſe principles there can be no cer- "tain idea at all of it."

Your lordſhip ſays here "thoſe principles," and in other places "theſe principles," without particularly ſetting them down, that I know. I am ſure, without laying down propoſitions that are mine, and proving that, thoſe granted, "we cannot come to any certainty "that there is any ſuch thing as ſubſtance," which is the thing to be proved; your lordſhip proves nothing in the caſe againſt me. What therefore the certain idea, which I do not underſtand, or idea of ſubſtance, has to do here, is not eaſy to ſee. For that which I am charged with, is the diſcarding ſubſtance. But the diſcarding ſubſtance, is not the diſcarding the notion of ſubſtance. Mr. Newton has diſcarded Des Cartes's vortices, i. e. laid down principles from which he proves there is no ſuch thing; but he has not thereby diſcarded the notion or idea of thoſe vortices, for that he had when he confuted their being, and every one who now reads and underſtands him, will have. But, as I have already obſerved, your lordſhip here, I know not upon what ground, nor with what intention, confounds the idea of ſubſtance and ſubſtance itſelf: for to the words above ſet down, your lordſhip ſubjoins, " that you aſſert it to " be one of the moſt natural and certain ideas in our " minds, becauſe it is a repugnance to our firſt con- " ception of things, that modes or accidents ſhould " ſubſiſt by themſelves; and therefore your lordſhip " ſaid, the rational idea of ſubſtance is one of the firſt " ideas in our minds, and however imperfect and ob- " ſcure our notion be, yet we are as certain that ſub- " ſtances are and muſt be, as that there are any beings " in the world." Herein I tell your lordſhip that I agree with you, and therefore I hope this is no objection againſt the Trinity. Your lordſhip ſays, you " never thought it was: but to lay all foundations of " certainty, as to matters of faith, upon clear and " diſtinct ideas, which was the opinion you oppoſed, " does certainly overthrow all myſteries of faith, and " excludes the notion of ſubſtance out of rational diſ- " courſe;" which your lordſhip affirms to have been your meaning.

How theſe words, " as to matters of faith," came in, or what they had to do againſt me in an anſwer only to me, I do not ſee: neither will I here examine what it is to be " one of the moſt natural and " certain ideas in our minds." But be it what it will, this I am ſure, that neither that, nor any thing elſe contained in this paragraph, any way proves, " that " upon my principles we cannot come to any certainty " that there is any ſuch thing as ſubſtance in the world:" which was the propoſition to be proved.

In the next place then, I crave leave to conſider how that is proved, which though nothing to the propoſition to be proved, is yet what you here aſſert; viz. " that the idea of ſubſtance is one of the moſt " natural and certain ideas in our minds:" your proof of it is this, " becauſe it is a repugnancy to our firſt " conceptions of things, that modes and accidents " ſhould ſubſiſt by themſelves, and therefore the ra- " tional idea of ſubſtance is one of the firſt ideas in " our minds."

From whence I grant it to be a good conſequence, that to thoſe who find this repugnance the idea of a support is very necessary; or, if you please to call it so, very rational. But a clear and distinct idea of the thing itself, which is the support, will not thence be proved to be one of the first ideas in our minds; or that any such idea is ever there at all. He that is satisfied that Pendennis-castle, if it were not supported, would fall into the sea, must think of a support that sustains it: but whether the thing that it rests on be timber, or brick, or stone, he has, by his bare idea of the necessity of some support that props it up, no clear and distinct idea at all.

In this paragraph you farther say, "that the laying "all foundation of certainty as to matters of faith on "clear and distinct ideas, does certainly exclude the "notion of substance out of rational discourse." Answ. This is a proposition that will need a proof; because every body at first sight will think it hard to be proved. For it is obvious, that let certainty in matters of faith, or any matters whatsoever, be laid on what it will, it excludes not the notion of substance certainly out of rational discourse; unless it be certainly true, that we can rationally discourse of nothing but what we certainly know. But whether it be a proposition easy or not easy to be proved, this is certain, that it concerns not me; for I lay not "all foundation of certainty, as "to matters of faith, upon clear and distinct ideas:" and therefore if it does discard substance out of the reasonable part of the world, as your lordship phrases it above, or excludes the notion of substance out of rational discourse; whatever havoc it makes of substance, or its idea, no one jot of the mischief is to be laid at my door, because that is no principle of mine.

Your lordship ends this paragraph with telling me, that "I at length apprehend your lordship's meaning."

I wish heartily that I did, because it would be much more for your ease, as well as my own. For in this case of substance, I find it not easy to know your meaning, or what it is I am blamed for. For in the beginning of this dispute, it is the being of substance; and here again it is substance itself is discarded. And in this very paragraph, writ as it seems to explain yourself, ſo that in the cloſe of it you tell me that "at length I "apprehend your meaning to be that the notion of ſub- "ſtance is excluded out of rational diſcourſe;" the explication is ſuch, that it renders your lordſhip's meaning to be more obſcure and uncertain than it was before. For in the ſame paragraph your lordſhip ſays, that "upon my principles there can be no certain idea at all "of ſubſtance;" and alſo, that "however imperfect "and obſcure our notions be, yet we are as certain that "ſubſtances are and muſt be, as that there are any be- "ings in the world." So that ſuppoſing I did know (as I do not) what your lordſhip means by certain idea of ſubſtance, yet I muſt own ſtill, that what your meaning is by diſcarding of ſubſtance, whether it be the idea of ſubſtance, or the being of ſubſtance, I do not know. But that, I think, need not much trouble me, ſince your lordſhip does not, that I ſee, ſhow how any poſition or principle of mine overthrows either ſubſtance itſelf, or the idea of it, or excludes either of them out of rational diſcourſe.

In your next paragraph, you ſay, "I declare, p. 35, "that if any one aſſert that we can have no ideas but "from ſenſation and reflection, it is not my opinion." My lord, I have looked over that 35th page, and find no ſuch words of mine there; but refer my reader to that and the following pages, for my opinion concerning ideas from ſenſation and reflection, how far they are the foundation and materials of all our knowledge. And this I do, becauſe to thoſe words which your lordſhip has ſet down as mine, out of the 35th page, but are not there, you ſubjoin, "that you are very glad of it, and "will do me all the right you can in this matter;" which ſeems to imply, that it is a matter of great conſequence, and therefore I deſire my meaning may be taken in my own words, as they are ſet down at large.

The promiſe your lordſhip makes me, "of doing me "all the right you can," I return you my humble thanks for, becauſe it is a piece of juſtice ſo ſeldom done in controverſy; and becauſe I ſuppoſe you have here made me this promiſe, to authorize me to mind you of it, if at any time your haſte ſhould make you

miſtake

mistake my words or meaning: to have one's words exactly quoted, and their meaning interpreted by the plain and visible design of the author in his whole discourse, being a right which every writer has a just claim to, and such as a lover of truth will be very wary of violating. An instance of some sort of intrenchment on this, I humbly conceive, there is in the next page but one, where you interpret my words, as if I excused a mistake I had made, by calling it a slip of my pen; whereas, my lord, I do not own any slip of my pen in that place, but say that the meaning of my expression there is to be interpreted by other places, and particularly by those where I treat professedly of that subject: and that in such cases, where an expression is only incident to the matter in hand, and may seem not exactly to quadrate with the author's sense, where he designedly treats of that subject; it ought rather to be interpreted as a slip of his pen, than as his meaning. I should not have taken so particular a notice of this, but that you, by having up these words, with an air that makes me sensible how wary I ought to be, show what use would be made of it, if ever I had pleaded the slip of my pen.

In the following pages I find a discourse drawn up under several ranks of numbers, to prove, as I guess, this proposition, "that in my way of ideas we cannot "come to any certainty as to the nature of substance." I shall be in a condition to answer to this accusation, when I shall be told what particular proposition, as to the nature of substance, it is, which in my way of ideas we cannot come to any certainty of. Because probably it may be such a proposition concerning the nature of substance, as I shall readily own, that in my way of ideas we can come to no certainty of; and yet I think the way of ideas not at all to be blamed, till there can be shown another way, different from that of ideas, whereby we may come to a certainty of it. For it was never pretended, that by ideas we could come to certainty concerning every proposition, that could be made concerning substance or any thing else.

Besides the doubtfulness visible in the phrase itself, there is another reason that hinders me from understanding preciſely what is meant by theſe words, to " come " to a certainty as to the nature of ſubſtance; viz. becauſe your lordſhip makes nature and ſubſtance to be the ſame: ſo that to come to a certainty as to the nature of ſubſtance, is, in your lordſhip's ſenſe of nature, to come to a certainty as to the ſubſtance of ſubſtance; which, I own, I do not clearly underſtand.

Another thing that hinders me from giving particular anſwers to the arguments that may be ſuppoſed to be contained in ſo many pages, is, that I do not ſee, how what is diſcourſed in thoſe thirteen or fourteen pages is brought to prove this propoſition, " that in my way of " ideas we cannot come to any certainty as to the na- " ture of ſubſtance:" and it would require too many words to examine every one of thoſe heads, period by period, to ſee what they prove; when you yourſelf do not apply them to the direct probation of any propoſition, that I underſtand.

Indeed you wind up this diſcourſe with theſe words, " that you leave the reader to judge whether this be a " tolerable account of the idea of ſubſtance by ſenſation " and reflection." Anſw. That which your lordſhip has given in the preceding pages, " I think is not a " very tolerable account of my idea of ſubſtance;" ſince the account you give over and over again of my idea of ſubſtance, is, that " it is nothing but a complex idea of " accidents." This is your account of my idea of ſubſtance, which you inſiſt ſo much on, and which you ſay you took out of thoſe places I myſelf produced in my firſt letter. But if you had been pleaſed to have ſet down this one, which is to be found there amongſt the reſt produced by me out of B. ii. c. 12. § 6. of my Eſſay, viz. " that the ideas of ſubſtances are ſuch com- " binations of ſimple ideas, as are taken to repreſent " diſtinct particular things ſubſiſting by themſelves; " in which, the ſuppoſed or confuſed idea of ſubſtance " is always the firſt and chief." This would have been a full anſwer to all that I think you have under that variety of heads objected againſt my idea of ſubſtance. But your lordſhip, in your repreſentation of my idea of ſubſtance, thought fit to leave this paſſage out; though you you are pleased to set down several others produced both before and after it in my first letter: which, I think, gives me a right humbly to return your lordship your own words: "and now I freely leave the reader to judge "whether this, which your lordship has given, be a "tolerable account of my idea of substance."

The next point to be considered is concerning the immateriality of the soul; whereof there is a great deal said. The original of this controversy I shall set down in your lordship's own words: you say, "the only rea- "son you had to engage in this matter was the bold "assertion, that the ideas we have by sensation or re- "flection, are the sole matter and foundation of all our "reasoning, and that our certainty lies in perceiving "the agreement and disagreement of ideas, as expressed "in any proposition: which last, you say, are my own "words."

To overthrow this bold assertion, you urge my acknowledgement, "that upon my principles it cannot "be demonstratively proved, that the soul is immaterial, "though it be in the highest degree probable:" and then ask, "is not this the giving up the cause of cer- "tainty?" Answ. Just as much the giving up the cause of certainty on my side, as it is on your lordship's: who, though you will not please to tell wherein you place certainty, yet it is to be supposed you do place certainty in something or other. Now let it be what you will that you place certainty in, I take the liberty to say, that you cannot certainly prove, i. e. demonstrate, that the soul of man is immaterial: I am sure you have not so much as offered at any such proof, and therefore you give up the cause of certainty upon your principles. Because if the not being able to demonstrate, that the soul is immaterial, upon his principles, who declares wherein he thinks certainty consists, be the giving up of the cause of certainty; the not being able to demonstrate the immateriality of the soul, upon his principles, who does not tell wherein certainty consists, is no less a giving up of the cause of certainty. The only odds between these two is more art and reserve in the one than the other. And therefore, my lord, you must either upon your prin-principles of certainty demonſtrate that the ſoul is immaterial, or you muſt allow me to ſay, that you too give up the cauſe of certainty, and your principles tend to ſcepticiſm as much as mine. Which of theſe two your lordſhip ſhall pleaſe to do, will be to me advantageous; for by the one I ſhall get a demonſtration of the ſoul's immateriality, (of which I ſhould be very glad) and that upon principles which, reaching farther than mine, I ſhall embrace, as better than mine, and become your lordſhip's profeſſed convert. Till then, I ſhall reſt ſatisfied that my principles, be they as weak and fallible as your lordſhip pleaſes, are no more guilty of any ſuch tendency, than theirs, who, talking more of certainty, cannot attain to it in caſes where they condemn the way of ideas for coming ſhort of it.

You a little lower in the ſame page ſet down theſe as my words, "that I never offered it as a way of certainty, where we cannot reach certainty." I have already told you, that I have been ſometimes in doubt what copy you had got of my Eſſay; becauſe I often found your quotations out of it did not agree with what I read in mine: but by this inſtance here, and ſome others, I know not what to think; ſince in my letter, which I did myſelf the honour to ſend your lordſhip, I am ſure the words are not as they are here ſet down. For I ſay not that I offered the way of certainty there ſpoken of; which looks as if it were a new way of certainty, that I pretended to teach the world. Perhaps the difference in theſe, from my words, is not ſo great, that upon another occaſion I ſhould take notice of it. But it being to lead people into an opinion, that I ſpoke of the way of certainty by ideas, as ſomething new, which I pretended to teach the world, I think it worth while to ſet down my words themſelves; which I think are ſo penned, as to ſhow a great caution in me to avoid ſuch an opinion. My words are, "I think it is a way to "bring us to a certainty in thoſe things, which I have "offered as certain; but I never thought it a way to "certainty, where we cannot reach certainty."

What uſe your lordſhip makes of the term "offered," applied to what I applied it not, is to be ſeen in your next next words, which you subjoin to those which you set down for mine: "but did you not offer to put us into a "way of certainty? And what is that but to attain cer- "tainty in such things where we could not otherwise "do it?" Answ. If this your way of reasoning here carries certainty in it, I humbly conceive, in your way of certainty by reason, certainty may be attained, where it could not otherwise be had. I only beg you, my lord, to show me the place, where I offer to put you in a way of certainty different from what had formerly been the way of certainty, that men by it might attain to certainty in things, which they could not before my book was writ. Nobody, who reads my Essay with that indifferency, which is proper to a lover of truth, can avoid seeing, that what I say of certainty was not to teach the world a new way of certainty (though that be one great objection of yours against my book) but to endeavour to show wherein the old and only way of certainty consists. What was the occasion and design of my book, may be seen plainly enough in the epistle to the reader, without any need that any thing more should be said of it. And I am too sensible of my own weakness, not to profess, as I do, "that I pretend not to teach, but "to inquire." I cannot but wonder what service you, my lord, who are a teacher of authority, mean to truth or certainty, by condemning the way of certainty by ideas; because I own, by it I cannot demonstrate that the soul is immaterial. May it not be worth your considering, what advantage this will be to scepticism, when upon the same grounds your words here shall be turned upon you; and it shall be asked, "what a strange way of certainty is this, [your "lordship's way by reason] if it fails us in some of the "first foundations of the real knowledge of ourselves?"

Essay, b. ii. c. 11. § 17.

To avoid this, you undertake to prove from my own principles, that we may be certain, "that the first eter- "nal thinking being, or omnipotent spirit, cannot, if "he would, give to certain systems of created sensible "matter, put together as he sees fit, some degrees of "sense, perception, and thought." For this, my lord, is

Eſſay. b. iv. c. 3. § 6.

is my propoſition, and this the utmoſt that I have ſaid concerning the power of thinking in matter.

Your firſt argument I take to be this, that, according to me, the knowledge we have being by our ideas, and our idea of matter in general being a ſolid ſubſtance, and our idea of body a ſolid extended figured ſubſtance; if I admit matter to be capable of thinking, I confound the idea of matter with the idea of a ſpirit: to which I anſwer, No; no more than I confound the idea of matter with the idea of an horſe, when I ſay that matter in general is a ſolid extended ſubſtance; and that an horſe is a material animal, or an extended ſolid ſubſtance with ſenſe and ſpontaneous motion.

The idea of matter is an extended ſolid ſubſtance; wherever there is ſuch a ſubſtance, there is matter, and the eſſence of matter, whatever other qualities, not contained in that eſſence, it ſhall pleaſe God to ſuperadd to it. For example, God creates an extended ſolid ſubſtance, without the ſuperadding any thing elſe to it, and ſo we may conſider it at reſt: to ſome parts of it he ſuperadds motion, but it has ſtill the eſſence of matter: other parts of it he frames into plants, with all the excellencies of vegetation, life and beauty, which are to be found in a roſe or a peach-tree, &c. above the eſſence of matter in general, but it is ſtill but matter: to other parts he adds ſenſe and ſpontaneous motion, and thoſe other properties that are to be found in an elephant. Hitherto it is not doubted but the power of God may go, and that the properties of a roſe, a peach, or an elephant, ſuperadded to matter, change not the properties of matter; but matter is in theſe things matter ſtill. But if one venture to go on one ſtep further, and ſay, God may give to matter thought, reaſon, and volition, as well as ſenſe and ſpontaneous motion, there are men ready preſently to limit the power of the omnipotent creator, and tell us he cannot do it; becauſe it deſtroys the eſſence, "changes the eſſential properties of matter." To make good which aſſertion, they have no more to ſay, but that thought and reaſon are not included in the eſſence of matter. I grant it; but whatever ever excellency, not contained in its essence, be superadded to matter, it does not destroy the essence of matter, if it leaves it an extended solid substance; wherever that is, there is the essence of matter: and if every thing of greater perfection, superadded to such a substance, destroys the essence of matter, what will become of the essence of matter in a plant, or an animal, whose properties far exceed those of a mere extended solid substance?

But it is farther urged, that we cannot conceive how matter can think. I grant it; but to argue from thence, that God therefore cannot give to matter a faculty of thinking, is to say God's omnipotency is limited to a narrow compass, because man's understanding is so; and brings down God's infinite power to the size of our capacities. If God can give no power to any parts of matter, but what men can account for from the essence of matter in general; if all such qualities and properties must destroy the essence, or change the essential properties of matter, which are to our conceptions above it, and we cannot conceive to be the natural consequence of that essence: it is plain, that the essence of matter is destroyed, and its essential properties changed in most of the sensible parts of this our system. For it is visible, that all the planets have revolutions about certain remote centres, which I would have any one explain, or make conceivable by the bare essence or natural powers depending on the essence of matter in general, without something added to that essence, which we cannot conceive: for the moving of matter in a crooked line, or the attraction of matter by matter, is all that can be said in the case; either of which it is above our reach to derive from the essence of matter, or body in general; though one of these two must unavoidably be allowed to be superadded in this instance to the essence of matter in general. The omnipotent Creator advised not with us in the making of the world, and his ways are not the less excellent, because they are past our finding out.

In the next place, the vegetable part of the creation is not doubted to be wholly material; and yet he that will

will look into it, will obſerve excellencies and operations in this part of matter, which he will not find contained in the eſſence of matter in general, nor be able to conceive how they can be produced by it. And will he therefore ſay, that the eſſence of matter is deſtroyed in them, becauſe they have properties and operations not contained in the eſſential properties of matter as matter, nor explicable by the eſſence of matter in general?

Let us advance one ſtep farther, and we ſhall, in the animal world, meet with yet greater perfections and properties, no ways explicable by the eſſence of matter in general. If the omnipotent Creator had not ſuperadded to the earth, which produced the irrational animals, qualities far ſurpaſſing thoſe of the dull dead earth, out of which they were made, life, ſenſe, and ſpontaneous motion, nobler qualities than were before in it, it had ſtill remained rude ſenſeleſs matter; and if to the individuals of each ſpecies he had not ſuperadded a power of propagation, the ſpecies had periſhed with thoſe individuals: but by theſe eſſences or properties of each ſpecies, ſuperadded to the matter which they were made of, the eſſence or properties of matter in general were not deſtroyed or changed, any more than any thing that was in the individuals before was deſtroyed or changed by the power of generation, ſuperadded to them by the firſt benediction of the Almighty.

In all ſuch caſes, the ſuperinducement of greater perfections and nobler qualities deſtroys nothing of the eſſence or perfections that were there before, unleſs there can be ſhowed a manifeſt repugnancy between them; but all the proof offered for that, is only, that we cannot conceive how matter, without ſuch ſuperadded perfections, can produce ſuch effects; which is, in truth, no more than to ſay, matter in general, or every part of matter, as matter, has them not; but is no reaſon to prove that God, if he pleaſes, cannot ſuperadd them to ſome parts of matter: unleſs it can be proved to be a contradiction, that God ſhould give to ſome parts of matter qualities and perfections, which matter in general has not; though we cannot conceive how matter is inveſted inveſted with them, or how it operates by virtue of thoſe new endowments. Nor is it to be wondered that we cannot, whilſt we limit all its operations to thoſe qualities it had before, and would explain them by the known properties of matter in general, without any ſuch ſuper-induced perfections. For if this be a right rule of reaſoning to deny a thing to be, becauſe we cannot conceive the manner how it comes to be; I ſhall deſire them who uſe it to ſtick to this rule, and ſee what work it will make both in divinity as well as philoſophy; and whether they can advance any thing more in favour of ſcepticiſm.

For to keep within the preſent ſubject of the power of thinking and ſelf-motion, beſtowed by omnipotent power on ſome parts of matter: the objection to this is, I cannot conceive how matter ſhould think. What is the conſequence? ergo, God cannot give it a power to think. Let this ſtand for a good reaſon, and then proceed in other caſes by the ſame. You cannot conceive how matter can attract matter at any diſtance, much leſs at the diſtance of 1,000,000 miles; ergo, God cannot give it ſuch a power. You cannot conceive how matter ſhould feel or move itſelf, or affect an immaterial being, or be moved by it; ergo, God cannot give it ſuch powers: which is in effect to deny gravity and the revolution of the planets about the ſun; to make brutes mere machines, without ſenſe or ſpontaneous motion; and to allow man neither ſenſe nor voluntary motion.

Let us apply this rule one degree farther. You cannot conceive how an extended ſolid ſubſtance ſhould think, therefore God cannot make it think: can you conceive how your own ſoul, or any ſubſtance thinks? You find indeed, that you do think, and ſo do I; but I want to be told how the action of thinking is performed: this, I confeſs, is beyond my conception; and I would be glad any one, who conceives it, would explain it to me. God, I find, has given me this faculty; and ſince I cannot but be convinced of his power in this inſtance, which though I every moment experiment in myſelf, yet I cannot conceive the manner of; what would it be leſs than an inſolent abſurdity to deny his power power in other like caſes only for this reaſon, becauſe I cannot conceive the manner how?

To explain this matter a little farther: God has created a ſubſtance; let it be, for example, a ſolid extended ſubſtance: is God bound to give it, beſides being, a power of action? that, I think, nobody will ſay. He therefore may leave it in a ſtate of inactivity, and it will be nevertheleſs a ſubſtance; for action is not neceſſary to the being of any ſubſtance, that God does create. God has likewiſe created and made to exiſt, de novo, an immaterial ſubſtance, which will not loſe its being of a ſubſtance, though God ſhould beſtow on it nothing more but this bare being, without giving it any activity at all. Here are now two diſtinct ſubſtances, the one material, the other immaterial, both in a ſtate of perfect inactivity. Now, I aſk, what power God can give to one of theſe ſubſtances (ſuppoſing them to retain the ſame diſtinct natures, that they had as ſubſtances in their ſtate of inactivity) which he cannot give to the other? In that ſtate, it is plain, neither of them thinks; for thinking being an action, it cannot be denied, that God can put an end to any action of any created ſubſtance, without annihilating of the ſubſtance whereof it is an action: and if it be ſo, he can alſo create or give exiſtence to ſuch a ſubſtance, without giving that ſubſtance any action at all. Now I would aſk, why omnipotency cannot give to either of theſe ſubſtances, which are equally in a ſtate of perfect inactivity, the ſame power that it can give to the other? Let it be, for example, that of ſpontaneous or ſelf-motion, which is a power that it is ſuppoſed God can give to an unſolid ſubſtance, but denied that he can give to a ſolid ſubſtance.

If it be aſked, why they limit the omnipotency of God, in reference to the one rather than the other of theſe ſubſtances; all that can be ſaid to it, is, that they cannot conceive how the ſolid ſubſtance ſhould ever be able to move itſelf. And as little, ſay I, are they able to conceive how a created unſolid ſubſtance ſhould move itſelf; but there may be ſomething in an immaterial ſubſtance, that you do not know. I grant it; and in a material one too: for example, gravitation of matter towards towards matter, and in the ſeveral proportions obſervable, inevitably ſhows, that there is ſomething in matter that we do not underſtand, unleſs we can conceive ſelf-motion in matter; or an inexplicable and inconceivable attraction in matter, at immenſe and almoſt incomprehenſible diſtances: it muſt therefore be confeſſed, that there is ſomething in ſolid, as well as unſolid ſubſtances, that we do not underſtand. But this we know, that they may each of them have their diſtinct beings, without any activity ſuperadded to them, unleſs you will deny, that God can take from any being its power of acting, which it is probable will be thought too preſumptuous for any one to do; and, I ſay, it is as hard to conceive ſelf-motion in a created immaterial, as in a material being, conſider it how you will: and therefore this is no reaſon to deny omnipotency to be able to give a power of ſelf-motion to a material ſubſtance, if he pleaſes, as well as to an immaterial; ſince neither of them can have it from themſelves, nor can we conceive how it can be in either of them.

The ſame is viſible in the other operation of thinking; both theſe ſubſtances may be made, and exiſt without thought; neither of them has, or can have the power of thinking from itſelf: God may give it to either of them, according to the good pleaſure of his omnipotency; and in which ever of them it is, it is equally beyond our capacity to conceive, how either of thoſe ſubſtances thinks. But for that reaſon, to deny that God, who had power enough to give them both a being out of nothing, can, by the ſame omnipotency, give them what other powers and perfections he pleaſes; has no better a foundation than to deny his power of creation, becauſe we cannot conceive how it is performed: and there at laſt this way of reaſoning muſt terminate.

That omnipotency cannot make a ſubſtance to be ſolid and not ſolid at the ſame time, I think, with due reverence, we may ſay; but that a ſolid ſubſtance may not have qualities, perfections and powers, which have no natural or viſibly neceſſary connexion with ſolidity and extenſion, is too much for us (who are but of yeſterday, and know nothing) to be poſitive in. If God cannot join things together by connexions inconceivable to us, we muſt deny even the conſiſtency and being of matter itſelf; ſince every particle of it having ſome bulk, has its parts connected by ways inconceivable to us. So that all the difficulties that are raiſed againſt the thinking of matter from our ignorance or narrow conceptions, ſtand not at all in the way of the power of God, if he pleaſes to ordain it ſo; nor prove any thing againſt his having actually endued ſome parcels of matter, ſo diſpoſed as he thinks fit, with a faculty of thinking, till it can be ſhown that it contains a contradiction to ſuppoſe it.

Though to me ſenſation be comprehended under thinking in general, yet in the foregoing diſcourſe, I have ſpoken of ſenſe in brutes, as diſtinct from thinking: becauſe your lordſhip, as I remember, ſpeaks of ſenſe in brutes. But here I take liberty to obſerve, that if your lordſhip allows brutes to have ſenſation, it will follow, either that God can and doth give to ſome parcels of matter a power of perception and thinking; or that all animals have immaterial and conſequently, according to your lordſhip, immortal ſouls, as well as men: and to ſay that fleas and mites, &c. have immortal ſouls as well as men, will poſſibly be looked on as going a great way to ſerve an hypotheſis, and it would not very well agree with what your lordſhip ſays, Anſw. 2. p. 64, to the words of Solomon, quoted out of Eccleſ. c. iii.

I have been pretty large in making this matter plain, that they who are ſo forward to beſtow hard cenſures or names on the opinions of thoſe who differ from them, may conſider whether ſometimes they are not more due to their own: and that they may be perſuaded a little to temper that heat, which ſuppoſing the truth in their current opinions, gives them (as they think) a right to lay what imputations they pleaſe on thoſe who would fairly examine the grounds they ſtand upon. For talking with a ſuppoſition and inſinuations, that truth and knowledge, nay, and religion too, ſtands and falls with their ſyſtems, is at beſt but an imperious way of begging the queſtion, and aſſuming to themſelves, under the pre-pretence of zeal for the cause of God, a title to infallibility. It is very becoming that men's zeal for truth should go as far as their proofs, but not go for proofs themselves. He that attacks received opinions, with any thing but fair arguments, may, I own, be justly suspected not to mean well, nor to be led by the love of truth; but the same may be said of him too, who so defends them. An errour is not the better for being common, nor truth the worse for having lain neglected: and if it were put to the vote any where in the world, I doubt, as things are managed, whether truth would have the majority; at least, whilst the authority of men, and not the examination of things, must be its measure. The imputation of scepticism, and those broad insinuations to render what I have writ suspected, so frequent as if that were the great business of all this pains you have been at about me, has made me say thus much, my lord, rather as my sense of the way to establish truth in its full force and beauty, than that I think the world will need to have any thing said to it, to make it distinguish between your lordship's and my design in writing; which therefore I securely leave to the judgment of the reader, and return to the argument in hand.

What I have above said I take to be a full answer to all that your lordship would infer from my idea of matter, of liberty, and of identity, and from the power of abstracting. You ask, "how can my way of liberty "agree with the idea that bodies can operate only by "motion and impulse?" Answ. By the omnipotency of God, who can make all things agree, that involve not a contradiction. It is true, I say, "that "bodies operate by impulse, and nothing "else." And so I thought when I writ it, and can yet conceive no other way of their operation. But I am since convinced by the judicious Mr. Newton's incomparable book, that it is too bold a presumption to limit God's power, in this point, by my narrow conceptions. The gravitation of matter towards matter, by ways inconceivable to me, is not only a demonstration that God can, if he pleases, put into bodies powers and ways of operation, above what can be derived from our idea of body, or can be explained by what we know of matter, but alſo an unqueſtionable and every where viſible inſtance, that he has done ſo. And therefore in the next edition of my book, I ſhall take care to have that paſſage rectified.

Essay, b. ii. c. 8. § 11.

As to ſelf-conſciouſneſs, your lordſhip aſks, "what "is there like ſelf-conſciouſneſs in matter?" Nothing at all in matter as matter. But that God cannot beſtow on ſome parcels of matter a power of thinking, and with it ſelf-conſciouſneſs, will never be proved by aſking, "how is it poſſible to apprehend that mere body ſhould "perceive that it doth perceive?" The weakneſs of our apprehenſion I grant in the caſe: I confeſs as much as you pleaſe, that we cannot conceive how a ſolid, no nor how an unſolid created ſubſtance thinks; but this weakneſs of our apprehenſions reaches not the power of God, whoſe weakneſs is ſtronger than any thing in man.

Your argument from abſtraction we have in this queſtion, "if it may be in the power of matter to think, "how comes it to be ſo impoſſible for ſuch organized "bodies as the brutes have to enlarge their ideas by "abſtraction?" Anſw. This ſeems to ſuppoſe, that I place thinking within the natural power of matter. If that be your meaning, my lord, I neither ſay, nor ſuppoſe, that all matter has naturally in it a faculty of thinking, but the direct contrary. But if you mean that certain parcels of matter, ordered by the divine power, as ſeems fit to him, may be made capable of receiving from his omnipotency the faculty of thinking; that indeed I ſay, and that being granted, the anſwer to your queſtion is eaſy, ſince if omnipotency can give thought to any ſolid ſubſtance, it is not hard to conceive, that God may give that faculty in an higher or lower degree, as it pleaſes him, who knows what diſpoſition of the ſubject is ſuited to ſuch a particular way or degree of thinking.

Another argument to prove, that God cannot endue any parcel of matter with the faculty of thinking, is taken from thoſe words of mine, where I ſhow by what connexion of ideas we may come to know, that God is an immaterial ſubſtance. They are theſe: "the idea of "an eternal, actual knowing being, with the idea of "im-

" immateriality, by the intervention of the idea of mat" ter, and of its actual division, divisibility, and want " of perception," &c. From whence your lordship thus argues, " here the want of perception is owned to " be so essential to matter, that God is therefore con" cluded to be immaterial." Answ. Perception and knowledge in that one eternal being, where it has its source, it is visible, must be essentially inseparable from it; therefore the actual want of perception in so great part of the particular parcels of matter, is a demonstration, that the first being, from whom perception and knowledge is inseparable, is not matter. How far this makes the want of perception an essential property of matter, I will not dispute; it suffices, that it shows, that perception is not an essential property of matter; and therefore matter cannot be that eternal original being, to which perception and knowledge is essential. Matter, I say, naturally is without perception; ergo, says your lordship, " want of perception is an essential pro" perty of matter, and God doth not change the essen" tial properties of things, their nature remaining." From whence you infer, that God cannot bestow on any parcel of matter (the nature of matter remaining) a faculty of thinking. If the rules of logic, since my days, be not changed, I may safely deny this consequence. For an argument that runs thus, " God does not, ergo,
" he cannot;" I was taught, when I came first to the university, would not hold. For I never said God did; but " that I see no contradiction in it, that " he should, if he pleased, give to some " systems of senseless matter a faculty of
" thinking:" and I know nobody, before Des Cartes, that ever pretended to show that there was any contradiction in it. So that at worst, my not being able to see in matter any such incapacity, as makes it impossible for omnipotency to bestow on it a faculty of thinking, makes me opposite only to the Cartesians. For as far as I have seen or heard, the fathers of the christian church never pretended to demonstrate that matter was incapable to receive a power of sensation, perception and thinking, from the hand of the omnipotent creator.

B. iv. c. 3. § 6.

Let us therefore, if you pleaſe, ſuppoſe the form of your argumentation right, and that your lordſhip means, God cannot: and then if your argument be good, it proves, that God could not give to Balaam's aſs a power to ſpeak to his maſter as he did; for the want of rational diſcourſe being natural to that ſpecies, it is but for your lordſhip to call it an eſſential property, and then God cannot change the eſſential properties of things, their nature remaining: whereby it is proved, that God cannot, with all his omnipotency, give to an aſs a power to ſpeak as Balaam's did.

You ſay, my lord, "you do not ſet bounds to God's "omnipotency: for he may, if he pleaſes, change a "body into an immaterial ſubſtance;" i. e. take away from a ſubſtance the ſolidity which it had before, and which made it matter, and then give it a faculty of thinking, which it had not before, and which makes it a ſpirit, the ſame ſubſtance remaining. For if the ſame ſubſtance remains not, body is not changed into an immaterial ſubſtance, but the ſolid ſubſtance, and all belonging to it, is annihilated, and an immaterial ſubſtance created; which is not a change of one thing into another, but the deſtroying of one, and making another "de novo." In this change therefore of a body, or material ſubſtance, into an immaterial, let us obſerve theſe diſtinct conſiderations.

Firſt, you ſay, "God may, if he pleaſes," take away from a ſolid ſubſtance ſolidity, which is that which makes it a material ſubſtance or body; and may make it an immaterial ſubſtance, i. e. a ſubſtance without ſolidity. But this privation of one quality, gives it not another: the bare taking away a lower or leſs noble quality, does not give it an higher or nobler; that muſt be the gift of God. For the bare privation of one, and a meaner quality, cannot be the poſition of an higher and better: unleſs any one will ſay, that cogitation, or the power of thinking, reſults from the nature of ſubſtance itſelf; which if it do, then wherever there is ſubſtance, there muſt be cogitation or a power of thinking. Here then, upon your lordſhip's own principles, is an immaterial ſubſtance without the faculty of thinking.

In

In the next place; you will not deny, but God may give to this substance, thus deprived of solidity, a faculty of thinking; for you suppose it made capable of that, by being made immaterial: whereby you allow, that the same numerical substance may be sometimes wholly incogitative, or without a power of thinking, and at other times perfectly cogitative, or endued with a power of thinking.

Further, you will not deny, but God can give it solidity, and make it material again. For I conclude it will not be denied, that God can make it again what it was before. Now I crave leave to ask your lordship, why God having given to this substance the faculty of thinking after solidity was taken from it, cannot restore to it solidity again, without taking away the faculty of thinking? When you have resolved this, my lord, you will have proved it impossible for God's omnipotence to give to a solid substance a faculty of thinking; but till then, not having proved it impossible, and yet denying that God can do it, is to deny that he can do what is in itself possible: which, as I humbly conceive, is visibly to set bounds to God's omnipotency; though you say here, "you do not set bounds to God's omnipo-"tency."

If I should imitate your lordship's way of writing, I should not omit to bring in Epicurus here, and take notice that this was his way, "deum verbis ponere, re "tollere:" and then add, "that I am certain you do "not think he promoted the great ends of morality and "religion." For it is with such candid and kind insinuations as these, that you bring in both Hobbes and Spinosa into your discourse here about God's being able, if he pleases, to give to some parcels of matter, ordered as he thinks fit, a faculty of thinking: neither of those authors having, as appears by any passages you bring out of them, said any thing to this question, nor having, as it seems, any other business here, but by their names skilfully to give that character to my book, with which you would recommend it to the world.

I pretend not to inquire what measure of zeal, nor for what, guides your lordship's pen in such a way of writing, as yours has all along been with me: only I cannot but conſider what reputation it would give to the writings of the fathers of the church, if they ſhould think truth required, or religion allowed them to imitate ſuch patterns. But God be thanked there be thoſe amongſt them who do not admire ſuch ways of managing the cauſe of truth or religion: they being ſenſible, that if every one, who believes or can pretend he has truth on his ſide, is thereby authorized without proof to inſinuate whatever may ſerve to prejudice men's minds againſt the other ſide; there will be great ravage made on charity and practice, without any gain to truth or knowledge. And that the liberties frequently taken by diſputants to do ſo, may have been the cauſe that the world, in all ages, has received ſo much harm, and ſo little advantage, from controverſies in religion.

Theſe are the arguments which your lordſhip has brought to confute one ſaying in my book, by other paſſages in it; which therefore being all but "argu- "menta ad hominem," if they did prove what they do not, are of no other uſe, than to gain a victory over me: a thing, methinks, ſo much beneath your lordſhip, that it does not deſerve one of your pages. The queſtion is, whether God can, if he pleaſes, beſtow on any parcel of matter, ordered as he thinks fit, a faculty of perception and thinking. You ſay, "you look upon a miſtake "herein to be of dangerous conſequence, as to the great "ends of religion and morality." If this be ſo, my lord, I think one may well wonder why your lordſhip has brought no arguments to eſtabliſh the truth itſelf, which you look on to be of ſuch dangerous conſequence to be miſtaken in; but have ſpent ſo many pages only in a perſonal matter, in endeavouring to ſhow, that I had inconſiſtencies in my book: which, if any ſuch thing had been ſhowed, the queſtion would be ſtill as far from being decided, and the danger of miſtaking about it as little prevented, as if nothing of all this had been ſaid. If therefore your lordſhip's care of the great ends of religion and morality have made you think it neceſſary to clear this queſtion, the world has reaſon to conclude there is little to be ſaid againſt that propoſi-

tion,

tion, which is to be found in my book concerning the poſſibility, that ſome parcels of matter might be ſo ordered by omnipotence, as to be endued with a faculty of thinking, if God ſo pleaſed; ſince your lordſhip's concern for the promoting the great ends of religion and morality, has not enabled you to produce one argument againſt a propoſition, that you think of ſo dangerous conſequence to them.

And here I crave leave to obſerve, that though in your title-page you promiſe to prove, that my notion of ideas is inconſiſtent with itſelf (which if it were, it could hardly be proved to be inconſiſtent with any thing elſe) and with the articles of the chriſtian faith; yet your attempts all along have been to prove me in ſome paſſages of my book inconſiſtent with myſelf, without having ſhown any propoſition in my book inconſiſtent with any article of the chriſtian faith.

I think your lordſhip has indeed made uſe of one argument of your own: but it is ſuch an one, that I confeſs I do not ſee how it is apt much to promote religion, eſpecially the chriſtian religion founded on revelation. I ſhall ſet down your lordſhip's words, that they may be conſidered. You ſay, "that you are of opinion, that "the great ends of religion and morality are beſt ſecured "by the proofs of the immortality of the ſoul from its "nature and properties; and which, you think, proves "it immaterial. Your lordſhip does not queſtion, whe-"ther God can give immortality to a material ſub-"ſtance; but you ſay, it takes off very much from the "evidence of immortality, if it depend wholly upon "God's giving that, which of its own nature it is not "capable of," &c. So likewiſe you ſay, "if a man "cannot be certain, but that matter may think (as I "affirm) then what becomes of the ſoul's immateriality "(and conſequently immortality) from its operations?" But for all this, ſay I, his aſſurance of faith remains on its own baſis. Now you appeal to any man of ſenſe, "whether the finding the uncertainty of his own prin-"ciples which he went upon in point of reaſon, doth "not weaken the credibility of theſe fundamental arti-"cles, when they are conſidered purely as matters of "faith?

" faith? for before, there was a natural credibility in " them on the account of reaſon; but by going on " wrong grounds of certainty, all that is loſt; and in- " ſtead of being certain, he is more doubtful than ever. " And if the evidence of faith falls ſo much ſhort of that " of reaſon, it muſt needs have leſs effect upon men's " minds, when the ſubſerviency of reaſon is taken away; " as it muſt be when the grounds of certainty by reaſon " are vaniſhed. Is it at all probable, that he who finds his " reaſon deceive him in ſuch fundamental points, ſhould " have his faith ſtand firm and unmoveable on the ac- " count of revelation? For in matters of revelation, " there muſt be ſome antecedent principles ſuppoſed, " before we can believe any thing on the account of it."

More to the ſame purpoſe we have ſome pages far- ther, where from ſome of my words your lordſhip ſays, " you cannot but obſerve, that we have no certainty " upon my grounds, that ſelf-conſciouſneſs depends " upon an individual immaterial ſubſtance, and conſe- " quently that a material ſubſtance may, according to " my principles, have ſelf-conſciouſneſs in it; at leaſt, " that I am not certain of the contrary. Whereupon " your lordſhip bids me conſider, whether this doth " not a little affect the whole article of the reſurrec- " tion?" What does all this tend to? but to make the world believe, that I have leſſened the credibility of the immortality of the ſoul and the reſurrection, by ſaying, that though it be moſt highly probable, that the ſoul is immaterial, yet upon my principles it cannot be demon- ſtrated; becauſe it is not impoſſible to God's omnipo- tency, if he pleaſes, to beſtow upon ſome parcels of matter, diſpoſed as he ſees fit, a faculty of thinking.

This your accuſation of my leſſening the credibility of theſe articles of faith is founded on this, that the article of the immortality of the ſoul abates of its credi- bility, if it be allowed, that its immateriality (which is the ſuppoſed proof from reaſon and philoſophy of its immortality) cannot be demonſtrated from natural rea- ſon. Which argument of your lordſhip's bottoms, as I humbly conceive, on this, that divine revelation abates of its credibility in all thoſe articles it propoſes, propor- tionably tionably as human reason fails to support the testimony of God. And all that your lordship in those passages has said, when examined, will I suppose be found to import thus much, viz. Does God propose any thing to mankind to be believed? It is very fit and credible to be believed, if reason can demonstrate it to be true. But, if human reason comes short, in the case, and cannot make it out, its credibility is thereby lessened: which is in effect to say, that the veracity of God is not a firm and sure foundation of faith to rely upon, without the concurrent testimony of reason; i. e. with reverence be it spoken, God is not to be believed on his own word, unless what he reveals be in itself credible, and might be believed without him.

If this be a way to promote religion, the christian religion in all its articles, I am not sorry that it is not a way to be found in any of my writings; for I imagine any thing like this would (and I should think deserved) to have other titles than bare scepticism bestowed upon it, and would have raised no small outcry against any one, who is not to be supposed to be in the right in all that he says, and so may securely say what he pleases. Such as I, the "profanum vulgus," who take too much upon us, if we would examine, have nothing to do but to hearken and believe, though what be said should subvert the very foundations of the christian faith.

What I have above observed, is so visibly contained in your lordship's argument, that when I met with it in your answer to my first letter, it seemed so strange for a man of your lordship's character, and in a dispute in defence of the doctrine of the Trinity, that I could hardly persuade myself, but it was a slip of your pen: but when I found it in your second letter made use of again, and seriously enlarged as an argument of weight to be insisted upon, I was convinced, that it was a principle that you heartily embraced, how little favourable soever it was to the articles of the christian religion, and particularly those which you undertook to defend.

I desire my reader to peruse the passages as they stand in your letters themselves, and see whether what you say in them does not amount to this, that a revelation from from God is more or less credible, according as it has a stronger or weaker confirmation from human reason. For,

1. Your lordship says, "you do not question whether God can give immortality to a material substance; but you say it takes off very much from the "evidence of immortality, if it depends wholly upon "God's giving that which of its own nature it is not "capable of."

To which I reply, any one's not being able to demonstrate the soul to be immaterial takes off not very much, nor at all of the evidence of its immortality, if God has revealed that it shall be immortal; because the veracity of God is a demonstration of the truth of what he has revealed, and the want of another demonstration of a proposition that is demonstratively true, takes not off from the evidence of it. For where there is a clear demonstration, there is as much evidence as any truth can have, that is not self-evident. God has revealed that the souls of men shall live for ever: but says your lordship, "from this evidence it takes off very much, if it "depends wholly upon God's giving that, which of its "own nature it is not capable of;" i. e. the revelation and testimony of God loses much of its evidence, if this depends wholly upon the good pleasure of God, and cannot be demonstratively made out by natural reason, that the soul is immaterial, and consequently in its own nature immortal. For that is all that here is or can be meant by these words, "which of its own nature it is "not capable of," to make them to the purpose. For the whole of your lordship's discourse here is to prove, that the soul cannot be material, because then the evidence of its being immortal would be very much lessened. Which is to say, that it is not as credible upon divine revelation, that a material substance should be immortal, as an immaterial; or which is all one, that God is not equally to be believed, when he declares that a material substance shall be immortal, as when he declares that an immaterial shall be so; because the immortality of a material substance cannot be demonstrated from natural reason.

Let

Let us try this rule of your lordſhip's a little farther. God hath revealed, that the bodies men ſhall have after the reſurrection, as well as their ſouls, ſhall live to eternity: does your lordſhip believe the eternal life of the one of theſe more than the other, becauſe you think you can prove it of one of them by natural reaſon, and of the other not? Or can any one, who admits of divine revelation in the caſe, doubt of one of them more than the other? Or think this propoſition leſs credible, the bodies of men, after the reſurrection, ſhall live for ever, than this, that the ſouls of men ſhall, after the reſurrection, live for ever? For that he muſt do, if he thinks either of them is leſs credible than the other. If this be ſo, reaſon is to be conſulted, how far God is to be believed, and the credit of divine teſtimony muſt receive its force from the evidence of reaſon; which is evidently to take away the credibility of divine revelation, in all ſupernatural truths, wherein the evidence of reaſon fails. And how much ſuch a principle as this tends to the ſupport of the doctrine of the Trinity, or the promoting the chriſtian religion, I ſhall leave it to your lordſhip to conſider. This I think I may be confident in, that few chriſtians have founded their belief of the immortality of the ſoul upon any thing but revelation: ſince if they had entertained it upon natural and philoſophical reaſons, they could not have avoided the believing its pre-exiſtence before its union to the body, as well as its future exiſtence after its ſeparation from it. This is juſtified by that obſervation of Dr. Cudworth, B. i. c. 1. § 31. where he affirms, "that there was never any "of the ancients, before chriſtianity, that held the "ſoul's future permanency after death, who did not "likewiſe aſſert its pre-exiſtence."

I am not ſo well read in Hobbes or Spinoſa, as to be able to ſay what were their opinions in this matter. But poſſibly there be thoſe, who will think your lordſhip's authority of more uſe to them in the caſe than thoſe juſtly decried names; and be glad to find your lordſhip a patron of the oracles of reaſon, ſo little to the advantage of the oracles of divine revelation. This at leaſt, I think, may be ſubmitted to the words at the bottom of the

the next page, that thoſe who have gone about to leſſen the credibility of the articles of faith, which evidently they do, who ſay they are leſs credible, becauſe they cannot be made out demonſtratively by natural reaſon; have not been thought to ſecure ſeveral of the articles of the chriſtian faith: eſpecially thoſe of the Trinity, Incarnation, and Reſurrection of the body, which are thoſe upon the account of which I am brought by your lordſhip into this diſpute.

I ſhall not trouble the reader with your lordſhip's endeavours in the following words, to prove, that if the ſoul be not an immaterial ſubſtance, it can be nothing but life; your very firſt words viſibly confuting all that you allege to that purpoſe. They are, "if the ſoul be "a material ſubſtance, it is really nothing but life;" which is to ſay, that if the ſoul be really a ſubſtance, it is not really a ſubſtance, but really nothing elſe but an affection of a ſubſtance: for the life, whether of a material or immaterial ſubſtance, is not the ſubſtance itſelf, but an affection of it.

2. You ſay, "although we think the ſeparate ſtate of "the ſoul after death is ſufficiently revealed in the "ſcripture; yet it creates a great difficulty in under-"ſtanding it, if the ſoul be nothing but life, or a ma-"terial ſubſtance, which muſt be diſſolved when life is "ended. For if the ſoul be a material ſubſtance, it "muſt be made up, as others are, of the coheſion of "ſolid and ſeparate parts, how minute and inviſible "ſoever they be. And what is it which ſhould keep "them together, when life is gone? So that it is no "eaſy matter to give an account, how the ſoul ſhould "be capable of immortality, unleſs it be an immate-"rial ſubſtance; and then we know the ſolution and "texture of bodies cannot reach the ſoul, being of a "different nature."

Let it be as hard a matter, as it will, "to give an "account what it is, that ſhould keep the parts of a "material ſoul together," after it is ſeparated from the body; yet it will be always as eaſy to give an account of it, as to give an account what it is which ſhould keep together a material and immaterial ſubſtance. And yet the difficulty that there is to give an account of that, I hope does not, with your lordship, weaken the credibility of the inseparable union of soul and body to eternity: and I persuade myself that the men of sense, to whom your lordship appeals in the case, do not find their belief of this fundamental point much weakened by that difficulty. I thought therefore (and by your lordship's permission would think so still) that the union of parts of matter, one with another, is as much in the hands of God, as the union of a material and immaterial substance; and that it does not take off very much, or at all, from the evidence of immortality, which depends on that union, that it is no easy matter to give an account what it is that should keep them together: though its depending wholly upon the gift and good pleasure of God, where the manner creates great difficulty in the understanding, and our reason cannot discover in the nature of things how it is, be that which your lordship so positively says, "lessens the credibility "of the fundamental articles of the resurrection and "immortality."

But, my lord, to remove this objection a little, and to show of how small force it is even with yourself; give me leave to presume, that your lordship as firmly believes the immortality of the body after the resurrection, as any other article of faith: if so, then it being no easy matter to give an account what it is that shall keep together the parts of a material soul, to one that believes it is material, can no more weaken the credibility of its immortality, than the like difficulty weakens the credibility of the immortality of the body. For when your lordship shall find it an easy matter to give an account, what it is besides the good pleasure of God, which shall keep together the parts of our material bodies to eternity, or even soul and body; I doubt not but any one, who shall think the soul material, will also find it as easy to give an account, what it is that shall keep those parts of matter also together to eternity.

Were it not that the warmth of controversy is apt to make men so far forget, as to take up those principles themselves (when they will serve their turn) which they have have highly condemned in others, I ſhould wonder to find your lordſhip to argue, that becauſe "it is a diffi-"culty to underſtand what ſhould keep together the "minute parts of a material ſoul, when life is gone; "and becauſe it is not an eaſy matter to give an account "how the ſoul ſhould be capable of immortality, unleſs "it be an immaterial ſubſtance:" therefore it is not ſo credible, as if it were eaſy to give an account, by natural reaſon, how it could be. For to this it is, that all this your diſcourſe tends, as is evident by what is already ſet down out of page 55, and will be more fully made out by what your lordſhip ſays in other places, though there need no ſuch proofs, ſince it would all be nothing againſt me in any other ſenſe.

I thought your lordſhip had in other places aſſerted, and inſiſted on this truth, that no part of divine revelation was the leſs to be believed, becauſe the thing itſelf created great difficulties in the underſtanding, and the manner of it was hard to be explained, and it was no eaſy matter to give an account how it was. This, as I take it, your lordſhip condemned in others, as a very unreaſonable principle, and ſuch as would ſubvert all the articles of the chriſtian religion that were mere matters of faith, as I think it will: and is it poſſible, that you ſhould make uſe of it here yourſelf, againſt the article of life and immortality, that Chriſt hath brought to light through the goſpel; and neither was, nor could be made out by natural reaſon without revelation? But you will ſay, you ſpeak only of the ſoul; and your words are, that "it is no eaſy matter to give an account, how the "ſoul ſhould be capable of immortality, unleſs it be an "immaterial ſubſtance." I grant it; but crave leave to ſay, that there is not any one of thoſe difficulties that are, or can be raiſed, about the manner how a material ſoul can be immortal, which do not as well reach the immortality of the body.

But if it were not ſo, I am ſure this principle of your lordſhip's would reach other articles of faith, wherein our natural reaſon finds it not eaſy to give an account how thoſe myſteries are; and which therefore, according to your principles, muſt be leſs credible than other articles, that that create less difficulty to the understanding. For your lordship says, that you appeal to any man of sense, whether to a man who thought by his principles he could from natural grounds demonstrate the immortality of the soul, the finding the uncertainty of those principles he went upon in point of reason, i. e. the finding he could not certainly prove it by natural reason, doth not weaken the credibility of that fundamental article, when it is considered purely as a matter of faith. Which in effect, I humbly conceive, amounts to this, that a proposition divinely revealed, that cannot be proved by natural reason, is less credible than one that can: which seems to me to come very little short of this, with due reverence be it spoken, that God is less to be believed when he affirms a proposition that cannot be proved by natural reason, than when he proposes what can be proved by it. The direct contrary to which is my opinion; though you endeavour to make it good by these following words: "if the evidence of faith falls so much "short of that of reason, it must needs have less effect "upon men's minds, when the subserviency of reason is "taken away; as it must be, when the grounds of cer-"tainty by reason are vanished. Is it at all probable, "that he who finds his reason deceive him in such fun-"damental points, should have his faith stand firm and "unmoveable on the account of revelation?" Than which, I think, there are hardly plainer words to be found out, to declare, that the credibility of God's testimony depends on the natural evidence or probability of the things we receive from revelation, and rises and falls with it; and that the truths of God, or the articles of mere faith, lose so much of their credibility, as they want proof from reason: which if true, revelation may come to have no credibility at all. For if in this present case, the credibility of this proposition, the souls of men shall live for ever, revealed in the scripture, be lessened by confessing it cannot be demonstratively proved from reason, though it be asserted to be most highly probable; must not, by the same rule, its credibility dwindle away to nothing, if natural reason should not be able to make it out to be so much as probable, or ſhould place the probability from natural principles on the other ſide? For if mere want of demonſtration leſſens the credibility of any propoſition divinely revealed, muſt not want of probability, or contrary probability from natural reaſon, quite take away its credibility? Here at laſt it muſt end, if in any one caſe the veracity of God, and the credibility of the truths we receive from him by revelation, be ſubjected to the verdicts of human reaſon, and be allowed to receive any acceſſion or diminution from other proofs, or want of other proofs of its certainty or probability.

If this be your lordſhip's way to promote religion, or defend its articles, I know not what argument the greateſt enemies of it could uſe, more effectual for the ſubverſion of thoſe you have undertaken to defend; this being to reſolve all revelation perfectly and purely into natural reaſon, to bound its credibility by that, and leave no room for faith in other things, than what can be accounted for by natural reaſon without revelation.

Your lordſhip inſiſts much upon it, as if I had contradicted what I had ſaid in my Eſſay, by ſaying, that upon my principles it cannot be demonſtratively proved, that it is an immaterial ſubſtance in us that thinks, however probable it be. He that will be at the pains to read that chapter of mine, and conſider it, will find, that my buſineſs there was to ſhow, that it was no harder to conceive an immaterial than a material ſubſtance; and that from the ideas of thought, and a power of moving of matter, which we experienced in ourſelves (ideas originally not belonging to matter as matter) there was no more difficulty to conclude there was an immaterial ſubſtance in us, than that we had material parts. Theſe ideas of thinking, and power of moving of matter, I in another place ſhowed, did demonſtratively lead us to the certain knowledge of the exiſtence of an immaterial thinking being, in whom we have the idea of ſpirit in the ſtricteſt ſenſe; in which ſenſe I alſo applied it to the ſoul, in that 23d chapter of my Eſſay: the eaſily conceivable poſſibility, nay, great probability, that that thinking ſubſtance in us is immaterial, giving me ſufficient ground for it. In which ſenſe I ſhall think think I may safely attribute it to the thinking substance in us, till your lordship shall have better proved from my words, that it is impossible it should be immaterial. For I only say, that it is possible, i. e. involves no contradiction, that God the omnipotent immaterial spirit should, if he pleases, give to some parcels of matter, disposed as he thinks fit, a power of thinking and moving: which parcels of matter so endued with a power of thinking and motion, might properly be called spirits, in contradistinction to unthinking matter. In all which, I presume, there is no manner of contradiction.

I justified my use of the word spirit in that sense, from the authorities of Cicero and Virgil, applying the Latin word spiritus, from whence spirit is derived, to a soul as a thinking thing, without excluding materiality out of it. To which your lordship replies, "that Cicero, "in his Tusculan Questions, supposes the soul not to "be a finer sort of body, but of a different nature from "the body.—That he calls the body the prison of the "soul.—And says that a wise man's business is to draw "off his soul from his body." And then your lordship concludes, as is usual, with a question, "is it possible "now to think so great a man looked on the soul but "as a modification of the body, which must be at an "end with life?" Answ. No; it is impossible that a man of so good sense as Tully, when he uses the word corpus or body, for the gross and visible parts of a man, which he acknowledges to be mortal; should look on the soul to be a modification of that body, in a discourse wherein he was endeavouring to persuade another, that it was immortal. It is to be acknowledged that truly great men, such as he was, are not wont so manifestly to contradict themselves. He had therefore no thought concerning the modification of the body of man in the case, he was not such a trifler as to examine, whether the modification of the body of a man was immortal, when that body itself was mortal: and therefore that which he reports as Dicœarchus's opinion, he dismisses in the beginning without any more ado, c. 11. But Cicero's was a direct, plain, and sensible inquiry, viz. What the soul was; to see whether from thence he could discover its immortality. But in all that diſcourſe in his firſt book of Tuſculan Queſtions, where he lays out ſo much of his reading and reaſon, there is not one ſyllable ſhowing the leaſt thought, that the ſoul was an immaterial ſubſtance; but many things directly to the contrary.

Chap. 19, 22, 30, 31, &c. So ſpeaks Ennius: "Terra corpus "eſt, at mens "ignis eſt."

Indeed (1.) he ſhuts out the body, taken in the ſenſe he uſes corpus all along, for the ſenſible organical parts of a man, and is poſitive that is not the ſoul: and body in this ſenſe, taken for the human body, he calls the priſon of the ſoul; and ſays a wiſe man, inſtancing Socrates and Cato, is glad of a fair opportunity to get out of it. But he no where ſays any ſuch thing of matter: he calls not matter in general the priſon of the ſoul, nor talks a word of being ſeparate from it.

(2.) He concludes, that the ſoul is not like other things here below, made up of a compoſition of the elements, c. 27.

(3.) He excludes the two groſs elements, earth and water, from being the ſoul, c. 26.

So far he is clear and poſitive: but beyond this he is uncertain; beyond this he could not get. For in ſome places he ſpeaks doubtfully, whether the ſoul be not air or fire: "anima ſit animus igniſve neſcio," c. 25. And therefore he agrees with Panœtius, that, if it be at all elementary, it is, as he calls it, "inflammata "anima, inflamed air;" and for this he gives ſeveral reaſons, c. 18, 19. And though he thinks it to be of a peculiar nature of its own, yet he is ſo far from thinking it immaterial, that he ſays, c. 19, that the admitting it to be of an aerial or igneous nature would not be inconſiſtent with any thing he had ſaid.

That which he ſeems moſt to incline to, is, that the ſoul was not at all elementary, but was of the ſame ſubſtance with the heavens; which Ariſtotle, to diſtinguiſh from the four elements and the changeable bodies here below, which he ſuppoſed made up of them, called "quinta eſſentia." That this was Tully's opinion, is plain from theſe words: "ergo, animus, qui, ut ego "dico, divinus eſt, ut Euripides audet dicere deus; &

" quidem si deus, aut anima aut ignis est, idem est " animus hominis. Nam ut illa natura cœlestis & terra " vacat & humore; sic utriusque harum rerum huma- " nus animus est expers. Sin autem est quinta quædam " natura ab Aristotele inducta; primum hæc & deo- " rum est & animorum. Hanc nos sententiam secuti, " his ipsis verbis in consolatione hæc expressimus," c. 26. And then he goes on, c. 27, to repeat those his own words, which your lordship has quoted out of him, wherein he had affirmed, in his treatise, " de consola- " tione," the soul not to have its original from the earth, or to be mixed or made of any thing earthly; but had said, " Singularis est igitur quædam natura & " vis animi sejuncta ab his usitatis notisque naturis." Whereby, he tells us, he meant nothing but Aristotle's " quinta essentia;" which being unmixed, being that of which the gods and souls consisted, he calls it " di- " vinum, cœleste," and concludes it eternal; it being, as he speaks, " sejuncta ab omni mortali concretione." From which it is clear, that in all his inquiry about the substance of the soul, his thoughts went not beyond the four elements, or Aristotle's " quinta essentia," to look for it. In all which there is nothing of immateriality, but quite the contrary.

He was willing to believe (as good and wise men have always been) that the soul was immortal; but for that, it is plain, he never thought of its immateriality, but as the eastern people do, who believe the soul to be immortal, but have nevertheless no thought, no conception of its immateriality. It is remarkable, what a very considerable and judicious author says in the case: " No " opinion, says he, has been so universally " received, as that of the immortality of " the soul; but its immateriality is a truth, " the knowledge whereof has not spread " so far. And indeed it is extremely difficult to let " into the mind of a Siamite the idea of a pure spirit. " This the missionaries, who have been longest among " them, are positive in: all the pagans of the east do " truly believe, that there remains something of a man " after his death, which subsists independently and " sepa-

Loubere du Royaume de Siam. t. i. c. 19. § 4.

" ſeparately from his body. But they give extenſion " and figure to that which remains, and attribute to it " all the ſame members, all the ſame ſubſtances, both " ſolid and liquid, which our bodies are compoſed of. " They only ſuppoſe that the ſouls are of a matter ſub- " tile enough to eſcape being ſeen or handled.—Such " were the ſhades and the manes of the Greeks and the " Romans. And it is by theſe figures of the ſouls, an- " ſwerable to thoſe of the bodies, that Virgil ſuppoſed " Æneas knew Palinurus, Dido, and Anchiſes, in the " other world."

This gentleman was not a man that travelled into thoſe parts for his pleaſure, and to have the opportunity to tell ſtrange ſtories, collected by chance, when he returned; but one choſen on purpoſe (and it ſeems well choſen for the purpoſe) to inquire into the ſingularities of Siam. And he has ſo well acquitted himſelf of the commiſſion, which his epiſtle dedicatory tells us he had, to inform himſelf exactly of what was moſt remarkable there; that had we but ſuch an account of other countries of the eaſt, as he has given us of this kingdom, which he was an envoy to, we ſhould be much better acquainted than we are, with the manners, notions, and religions of that part of the world, inhabited by civilized nations, who want neither good ſenſe nor acuteneſs of reaſon, though not caſt into the mould of the logic and philoſophy of our ſchools.

But to return to Cicero: it is plain, that in his inquiries about the ſoul his thoughts went not at all beyond matter. This the expreſſions, that drop from him in ſeveral places of this book, evidently ſhow: for example, that the ſouls of excellent men and women aſcended into heaven; of others, that they remained here on earth, c. 12. that the ſoul is hot, and warms the body: that at its leaving the body, it penetrates and divides, and breaks through our thick, cloudy, moiſt air: that it ſtops in the region of fire, and aſcends no farther, the equality of warmth and weight making that its proper place, where it is nouriſhed and ſuſtained with the ſame things, wherewith the ſtars are nouriſhed and ſuſtained; and that by the convenience of its neighbourhood, bourhood, it ſhall there have a clearer view and fuller knowledge of the heavenly bodies, c. 19. that the ſoul alſo from this height ſhall have a pleaſant and fairer proſpect of the globe of the earth, the diſpoſition of whoſe parts will then lie before it in one view, c. 20. that it is hard to determine what conformation, ſize, and place the ſoul has in the body: that it is too ſubtile to be ſeen: that it is in a human body as in a houſe, or a veſſel, or a receptacle, c. 22. all which are expreſſions that ſufficiently evidence, that he who uſed them had not in his mind ſeparated materiality from the idea of the ſoul.

It may perhaps be replied, that a great part of this, which we find in c. 19, is ſaid upon the principles of thoſe who would have the ſoul to be "anima inflam-"mata, inflamed air." I grant it: but it is alſo to be obſerved, that in this 19th, and the two following chapters, he does not only not deny, but even admits, that ſo material a thing as inflamed air may think.

The truth of the caſe in ſhort is this: Cicero was willing to believe the ſoul immortal, but when he ſought in the nature of the ſoul itſelf ſomething to eſtabliſh this his belief into a certainty of it, he found himſelf at a loſs. He confeſſed he knew not what the ſoul was; but the not knowing what it was, he argues, c. 2, was no reaſon to conclude it was not. And thereupon he proceeds to the repetition of what he had ſaid in his 6th book de Repub. concerning the ſoul. The argument, which borrowed from Plato he there makes uſe of, if it have any force in it, not only proves the ſoul to be immortal, but more than, I think, your lordſhip will allow to be true: for it proves it to be eternal, and without beginning, as well as without end; "neque "nata certe eſt, & æterna eſt," ſays he.

Indeed from the faculties of the ſoul he concludes right, that it is of divine original: but as to the ſubſtance of the ſoul, he at the end of this diſcourſe concerning its faculties, c. 25, as well as at the beginning of it, c. 22, is not aſhamed to own his ignorance of what it is: "anima ſit animus, igniſve neſcio; nec me pudet, "ut iſtos, fateri neſcire quod neſciam. Illud, ſi ulla alia

" de re obscura affirmare possum, sive anima, sive ignis " sit animus, eum jurarem esse divinum," c. 25. So that all the certainty he could attain to about the soul, was, that he was confident there was something divine in it; i. e. there were faculties in the soul that could not result from the nature of matter, but must have their original from a divine power: but yet those qualities, as divine as they were, he acknowledged might be placed in breath or fire, which I think your lordship will not deny to be material substances. So that all those divine qualities, which he so much and so justly extols in the soul, led him not, as appears, so much as to any the least thought of immateriality. This is demonstration, that he built them not upon an exclusion of materiality out of the soul; for he avowedly professes, he does not know but breath or fire might be this thinking thing in us: and in all his considerations about the substance of the soul itself, he stuck in air or fire, or Aristotle's " quinta " essentia;" for beyond those, it is evident, he went not.

But with all his proofs out of Plato, to whose authority he defers so much, with all the arguments his vast reading and great parts could furnish him with for the immortality of the soul, he was so little satisfied, so far from being certain, so far from any thought that he had, or could prove it, that he over and over again professes his ignorance and doubt of it. In the beginning he enumerates the several opinions of the philosophers, which he had well studied about it; and then, full of certainty, says, " harum sententiarum quæ vera sit, " deus aliquis videret, quæ veri simillima magna quæ- " stio," c. 11. And towards the latter end having gone them all over again, and one after another examined them, he professes himself still at a loss, not knowing on which to pitch, nor what to determine: " Mentis acies, says he, seipsam intuens nonnunquam " hebescit, ob eamque causam contemplandi diligen- " tiam omittimus. Itaque dubitans, circumspectans, " hæsitans, multa adversa revertens, tanquam in rate in " mari immenso, nostra vehitur oratio," c. 30. And to conclude this argument, when the person he introduces as discoursing with him, tells him he is resolved to to keep firm to the belief of immortality; Tully anſwers, c. 82. "Laudo id quidem, etſi nihil animis oportet "confidere; movemur enim ſæpe aliquo acute con- "cluſo, labamus, mutamuſque ſententiam clarioribus "etiam in rebus; in his eſt enim aliqua obſcuritas."

So unmoveable is that truth delivered by the ſpirit of truth, that though the light of nature gave ſome obſcure glimmering, ſome uncertain hopes of a future ſtate; yet human reaſon could attain to no clearneſs, no certainty about it, but that it was "JESUS CHRIST "alone who had brought life and immor- "tality to light through the goſpel." 2 Tim. i. 10. Though we are now told, that to own the inability of natural reaſon to bring immortality to light, or, which paſſes for the ſame, to own principles upon which the immateriality of the ſoul (and, as it is urged, conſequently its immortality) cannot be demonſtratively proved; does leſſen the belief of this article of revelation, which JESUS CHRIST alone has brought to light, and which conſequently the ſcripture aſſures us is eſtabliſhed and made certain only by revelation. This would not perhaps have ſeemed ſtrange from thoſe who are juſtly complained of, for ſlighting the revelation of the goſpel, and therefore would not be much regarded, if they ſhould contradict ſo plain a text of ſcripture in favour of their all-ſufficient reaſon: but what uſe the promoters of ſcepticiſm and infidelity, in an age ſo much ſuſpected by your lordſhip, may make of what comes from one of your great authority and learning, may deſerve your conſideration.

And thus, my lord, I hope I have ſatisfied you concerning Cicero's opinion about the ſoul, in his firſt book of Tuſculan Queſtions; which though I eaſily believe, as your lordſhip ſays, you are no ſtranger to, yet I humbly conceive you have not ſhown (and upon a careful peruſal of that treatiſe again, I think I may boldly ſay you cannot ſhow) one word in it, that expreſſes any thing like a notion in Tully of the ſoul's immateriality, or its being an immaterial ſubſtance.

From what you bring out of Virgil, your lordſhip concludes, "that he no more than Cicero does me any "kindneſs in this matter, being both aſſerters of the "ſoul's

" ſoul's immortality." My lord, were not the queſtion of the ſoul's immateriality, according to cuſtom, changed here into that of its immortality, which I am no leſs an aſſertor of than either of them, Cicero and Virgil do me all the kindneſs I deſired of them in this matter; and that was to ſhow, that they attributed the word " ſpiritus" to the ſoul of man, without any thought of its immateriality: and this the verſes you yourſelf bring out of Virgil, Æneid. 4. 385,

" Et cum frigida mors animæ ſeduxerit artus
" Omnibus umbra locis adero, dabis improbe pœnas;"

confirm, as well as thoſe I quoted out of his 6th book: and for this monſieur de la Loubere ſhall be my witneſs, in the words above ſet down out of him; where he ſhows, that there be thoſe amongſt the heathens of our days, as well as Virgil and others amongſt the ancient Greeks and Romans, who thought the ſouls or ghoſt of men departed did not die with the body, without thinking them to be perfectly immaterial; the latter being much more incomprehenſible to them than the former. And what Virgil's notion of the ſoul is, and that " corpus," when put in contradiſtinction to the ſoul, ſignifies nothing but the groſs tenement of fleſh and bones, is evident from this verſe of his Æneid. 6, where he calls the ſouls which yet were viſible, —— " Tenues ſine corpore vitæ."

Your lordſhip's anſwer concerning what is ſaid, Eccleſ. xiii, turns wholly upon Solomon's taking the ſoul to be immortal, which was not what I queſtioned: all that I quoted that place for was to ſhow, that ſpirit in Engliſh might properly be applied to the ſoul, without any notion of its immateriality: as רוח was by Solomon; which whether he thought the ſouls of men to be immaterial, does little appear in that paſſage, where he ſpeaks of the ſouls of men and beaſts together, as he does. But farther, what I contended for, is evident from that place, in that the word ſpirit is there applied, by our tranſlators, to the ſouls of beaſts, which your lord-lordship, I think, does not rank amongst the immaterial, and consequently immortal spirits, though they have sense and spontaneous motion.

But you say, "if the soul be not of itself a free thinking substance, you do not see what foundation there "is in nature for a day of judgment." Ans. Though the heathen world did not of old, nor do to this day, see a foundation in nature for a day of judgment; yet in revelation, if that will satisfy your lordship, every one may see a foundation for a day of judgment, because God has positively declared it; though God has not by that revelation taught us, what the substance of the soul is; nor has any where said, that the soul of itself is a free agent. Whatsoever any created substance is, it is not of itself, but is by the good pleasure of its Creator: whatever degrees of perfection it has, it has from the bountiful hand of its Maker. For it is true, in a natural as well as a spiritual sense, what St. Paul says, "not "that we are sufficient of ourselves to think "any thing as of ourselves, but our sufficiency is of God." 2 Cor. iii. 5.

But your lordship, as I guess by your following words, would argue, that a material substance cannot be a free agent; whereby I suppose you only mean, that you cannot see or conceive how a solid substance should begin, stop, or change its own motion. To which give me leave to answer, that when you can make it conceivable, how any created, finite, dependent substance, can move itself, or alter or stop its own motion, which it must, to be a free agent; I suppose you will find it no harder for God to bestow this power on a solid, than an unsolid created substance. Tully, in the place above-quoted, could not conceive this power to be in any thing, but what was from eternity: "cum pateat igitur æternum "id esse quod seipsum moveat, quis est qui hanc natu-"ram animis esse tributam neget?" But though you cannot see how any created substance, solid or not solid, can be a free agent (pardon me, my lord, if I put in both till your lordship please to explain it of either, and show the manner how either of them can, of itself, move Tusculan. Quæst. l. 1. c. 23.

itself

itſelf or any thing elſe) yet I do not think you will ſo far deny men to be free agents, from the difficulty there is to ſee how they are free agents, as to doubt whether there be foundation enough for a day of judgment.

It is not for me to judge how far your lordſhip's ſpeculations reach: but finding in myſelf nothing to be truer than what the wiſe Solomon tells me: "as thou "knoweſt not what is the way of the ſpirit, "nor how the bones do grow in the womb "of her that is with child; even ſo thou knoweſt not "the works of God who maketh all things;" I gratefully receive and rejoice in the light of revelation, which ſets me at reſt in many things, the manner whereof my poor reaſon can by no means make out to me: omnipotency, I know, can do any thing that contains in it no contradiction; ſo that I readily believe whatever God has declared, though my reaſon find difficulties in it, which it cannot maſter. As in the preſent caſe, God having revealed that there ſhall be a day of judgment, I think that foundation enough, to conclude men are free enough to be made anſwerable for their actions, and to receive according to what they have done; though how man is a free agent, ſurpaſs my explication or comprehenſion.

Eccl. xi. 5.

In anſwer to the place I brought out of St. Luke, your lordſhip aſks, "whether "from theſe words of our Saviour, it fol-"lows that a ſpirit is only an appearance?" I anſwer, No; nor do I know who drew ſuch an inference from them: but it follows, that in apparitions there is ſomething that appears, and that that which appears is not wholly immaterial; and yet this was properly called πνεῦμα, and was often looked upon by thoſe, who called it πνεῦμα in Greek, and now call it ſpirit in Engliſh, to be the ghoſt or ſoul of one departed: which, I humbly conceive, juſtifies my uſe of the word ſpirit, for a thinking voluntary agent, whether material or immaterial.

Chap. xxiv. ver. 39.

Your lordſhip ſays, that I grant, that it cannot, upon theſe principles, be demonſtrated, that the ſpiritual ſubſtance in us is immaterial: from whence you conclude, "that then my grounds of certainty from ideas are "plainly

"plainly given up." This being a way of arguing that you often make use of, I have often had occasion to consider it, and cannot after all see the force of this argument. I acknowledge, that this or that proposition cannot upon my principles be demonstrated; ergo, I grant this proposition to be false, that certainty consists in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of ideas: for that is my ground of certainty, and till that be given up, my grounds of certainty are not given up.

You farther tell me, that I say, the soul's immateriality may be proved probable to the highest degree, to which your lordship replies, "that is not the point: "for it is not probability, but certainty, that you are "promised in this way of ideas, and that the founda- "tion of our knowledge and real certainty lies in them; "and is it dwindled into a probability at last?" This is also what your lordship has been pleased to object to me more than once, that I promised certainty. I would be glad to know in what words this promise is made, and where it stands, for I love to be a man of my word. I have indeed told wherein I think certainty, real certainty does consist, as far as any one attains it; and I do not yet, from any thing your lordship has said against it, find any reason to change my opinion therein: but I do not remember that I promised certainty in this question, concerning the soul's immateriality, or in any of those propositions, wherein you thinking I come short of certainty, infer from thence, that my way of certainty by ideas is given up. And I am so far from promising certainty in all things, that I am accused by your lordship of scepticism, for setting too narrow bounds to our knowledge and certainty. Why therefore your lordship asks me, "and is the certainty" [of the soul's being immaterial] "dwindled into a probability at last?" will be hard to see a reason for, till you can show that I promised to demonstrate that it is immaterial; or that others, upon their principles without ideas, being able to demonstrate it immaterial, it comes to dwindle into bare probability, upon my principles by ideas.

One thing more I am obliged to take notice of. I have said, "that the belief of God being the founda- "tion

" tion of all religion and genuine morality, I thought " no arguments, that are made uſe of to work the per- " ſuaſion of a God into men's minds, ſhould be inva- " lidated, which, I grant, is of ill conſequence." To which words of mine I find, according to your particular favour to me, this reply: " that here I muſt " give your lordſhip leave to aſk me, what I think of " the univerſal conſent of mankind, as to the being of " God? Hath not this been made uſe of as an argument, " not only by chriſtians, but by the wiſeſt and greateſt " men among the heathens? And what then would I " think of one who ſhould go about to invalidate this " argument? And that by proving, that it hath been " diſcovered in theſe latter ages by navigation, that " there are whole nations at the bay of Soldania, in " Braſil, in the Caribbee-iſlands and Paraquaria, among " whom there was found no notion of a God: and " even the author of the Eſſay of Human Underſtand- " ing hath done this."

To this your queſtion, my lord, I anſwer, that I think that the univerſal conſent of mankind, as to the being of a God, amounts to thus much, that the vaſtly greater majority of mankind have, in all ages of the world, actually believed a God; that the majority of the remaining part have not actually diſbelieved it, and conſequently thoſe who have actually oppoſed the belief of a God, have truly been very few. So that comparing thoſe that have actually diſbelieved with thoſe who have actually believed a God, their number is ſo inconſiderable, that in reſpect of this incomparably greater majority of thoſe who have owned the belief of a God, it may be ſaid to be the univerſal conſent of mankind.

This is all the univerſal conſent which truth of matter of fact will allow, and therefore all that can be made uſe of to prove a God. But if any one would extend it farther, and ſpeak deceitfully for God; if this univerſality ſhould be urged in a ſtrict ſenſe, not for much the majority, but for a general conſent of every one, even to a man, in all ages and countries: this would make it either no argument, or a perfectly uſeleſs and un-unnecessary one. For if any one deny a God, such a perfect universality of consent is destroyed; and if nobody does deny a God, what need of arguments to convince atheists?

I would crave leave to ask your lordship, were there ever in the world any atheist or no? If there were not, what need is there of raising a question about the being of a God, when nobody questions it? What need of provisional arguments against a fault, from which mankind are so wholly free; and which, by an universal consent, they may be presumed to be secure from? If you say (as I doubt not but you will) that there have been atheists in the world, then your lordship's universal consent reduces itself to only a great majority; and then make that majority as great as you will, what I have said in the place quoted by your lordship, leaves it in its full force, and I have not said one word that does in the least invalidate this argument for a God. The argument I was upon there, was to show, that the idea of God was not innate; and to my purpose it was sufficient if there were but a less number found in the world, who had no idea of God, than your lordship will allow there have been of professed atheists: for whatsoever is innate, must be universal in the strictest sense; one exception is a sufficient proof against it. So that all that I said, and which was quite to another purpose, did not at all tend, nor can be made use of to invalidate the argument for a deity, grounded on such an universal consent as your lordship, and all that build on it must own, which is only a very disproportioned majority: such an universal consent my argument there neither affirms nor requires to be less, than you will be pleased to allow it. Your lordship therefore might, without any prejudice to those declarations of good-will and favour you have for the author of the Essay of Human Understanding, have spared the mentioning his quoting authors that are in print, for matters of fact, to quite another purpose, "as going about to invalidate the argument for a deity "from the universal consent of mankind;" since he leaves that universal consent as entire, and as large as you yourself do, or can own, or suppose it. But here I have have no reason to be sorry that your lordship has given me this occasion for the vindication of this passage of my book, if there should be any one besides your lordship who should so far mistake it, as to think it in the least invalidates the argument for a God, from the universal consent of mankind.

But because you question the credibility of those authors I have quoted, which, you say in the next paragraph, were very ill chosen; I will crave leave to say, that he whom I relied on for his testimony concerning the Hottentots of Soldania, was no less a man than an ambassador from the king of England to the great mogul: of whose relation, monsieur Thevenot, no ill judge in the case, had so great an esteem, that he was at the pains to translate it into French, and publish it in his (which is counted no unjudicious) collection of travels. But to intercede with your lordship for a little more favourable allowance of credit to sir Thomas Roe's relation, Coore, an inhabitant of the country who could speak English, assured Mr. Terry, that they of Soldania had no God. But if he too have the ill luck to find no credit with you, I hope you will be a little more favourable to a divine of the church of England now living, and admit of his testimony in confirmation of sir Thomas Roe's. This worthy gentleman, in the relation of his voyage to Surat, printed but two years since, speaking of the same people, has these words: "they are sunk even "below idolatry, are destitute of both priest "and temple, and saving a little show of "rejoicing, which is made at the full and new moon, "have lost all kind of religious devotion. Nature has "so richly provided for their convenience in this life, "that they have drowned all sense of the God of it, "and are grown quite careless of the next."

Terry's Voyage, p. 17 & 23.

Mr. Ovington, p. 489.

But to provide against the clearest evidence of atheism in these people, you say, "that the account given of "them makes them not fit to be a standard for the sense "of mankind." This, I think, may pass for nothing, till somebody be found, that makes them to be a standard for the sense of mankind: all the use I made of them was was to ſhow, that there were men in the world that had no innate idea of a God. But to keep ſomething like an argument going (for what will not that do?) you go near denying thoſe Cafers to be men: what elſe do theſe words ſignify? "a people ſo ſtrangely bereft of "common ſenſe, that they can hardly be reckoned "among mankind; as appears by the beſt accounts of "the Cafers of Soldania," &c. I hope if any of them were called Peter, James, or John, it would be paſt ſcruple that they were men; however Courvee, Wewena, and Couſheda, and thoſe others who had names, that had no place in your Nomenclator, would hardly paſs muſter with your lordſhip.

My lord, I ſhould not mention this, but that what you yourſelf ſay here may be a motive to you to conſider, that what you have laid ſuch ſtreſs on, concerning the general nature of man, as a real being, and the ſubject of properties, amounts to nothing for the diſtinguiſhing of ſpecies; ſince you yourſelf own that there may be individuals, wherein there is a common nature with a particular ſubſiſtence proper to each of them: whereby you are ſo little able to know of which of the ranks or ſorts they are, into which you ſay, "God has "ordered beings, and which he hath diſtinguiſhed by "eſſential properties, that you are in doubt whether "they ought to be reckoned among mankind or no."

Give me leave now to think, my lord, that I have given an anſwer to all, that is any way material in either of the letters you have honoured me with. If there be any argument which you think of weight, that you find omitted, upon the leaſt intimation from your lordſhip where it is, I promiſe to conſider it, and to endeavour to give you ſatisfaction concerning it, either by owning my conviction, or ſhowing what hinders it. This reſpect I ſhall think due from me to your lordſhip: though I know better to employ the little time my buſineſs and health afford me, than to trouble myſelf with the little cavillers, who may either be ſet on, or be forward (in hope to recommend themſelves) to meddle in this controverſy.

Before I conclude, it is fit I take notice of the obligation I have to you, for the pains you have been at about my Eſſay, which I conclude could not have been any way ſo effectually recommended to the world, as by your manner of writing againſt it. And ſince your lordſhip's ſharp ſight, ſo carefully employed for its correction, has, as I humbly conceive, found no faults in it, which your lordſhip's great endeavours this way have made out to be really there; I hope I may preſume it will paſs the better in the world, and the judgment of all conſidering men, and make it for the future ſtand better even in your lordſhip's opinion. I beg your lordſhip's pardon for this long trouble, and am,

My Lord,

Your Lordſhip's moſt humble, and Oates, May 4, 1698.

Moſt obedient Servant,

JOHN LOCKE.

INDEX

INDEX

TO THE

THIRD VOLUME.

A.

ASSURANCE, how it differs from certainty 275

B.

BODY, operates by impulse, 467
——The author's notion of his, 2 Cor. v, 10 307
——And of his own, 1 Cor. xv, 35, &c. 311
——The meaning of the same 305
——Whether the word body be a simple or complex term 309
——This only a controversy about the sense of a word 324

C.

CERTAINTY, the author makes it not depend on clear and distinct ideas 115, &c.
——His notion of it not dangerous 140, &c.
——How opposed by the bishop of Worcester 227, &c.
——And vindicated by the author, ibid.
——By ideas, by sense, &c. not inconsistent 231, &c.
——The author's notion of it not against the mysteries of faith 272
——How it differs from assurance 275
——May flow from a divine testimony 281
——The author's way of certainty not different from that of reason 383, &c.

D.

DEDUCTIONS, the author agrees with Aristotle in the way of making them 383 Demonstration, intuitive knowledge necessary in each step of a demonstration, yet not always so plain, as that two and two make four 402, &c.

I.

JARGON, how to be avoided 430
Idea, use of the term not dangerous 130
——Is fitter than the word notion 133
——Other words as liable to be abused as this ibid.
——Yet it is condemned, both as new, and not new 138
——The same with notion, sense, meaning, &c. 144
——The connexion of ideas may be clear, though they are not wholly so 241, &c.
——Are not the things, whereof they are ideas ibid.

K.

KNOWLEDGE, the author's definition of it explained and defended 145
——How it differs from faith 146
——His definition of it leads not to scepticism 354, &c.

M.

MATHEMATICS, of the use of them in natural philosophy 427
Matter, whether it may think, is not to be known 461, &c.
Maxims, the author denies not the certainty of them 376
He allows them to be of some use 378

N.

NATURE of man what it is 85, &c.
——The author's notion of nature and person defended 151, &c.

Nature,

Nature, Bishop of Worcester's account of nature, 155, &c.
——No need to consult Greek or Latin authors to understand this English word 363
——Mr. Boyle makes it not the same with substance 364
——The author's reply to the bishop, saying, "it is the subject of essential properties" 432

P.

PERSON, how explained by the bishop of Worcester 168, &c.
——His definition of it considered 172, &c.
——The author's no more against the Trinity than the bishop's 180
Philosophers, their authority should not determine our judgment 371

R.

RESURRECTION, the author's notion of it 303, &c.
——Not necessarily understood of the same body ibid. &c.
——The meaning of his body 308
——The same body of Christ arose, and why 313, 314
——How the scripture constantly speaks about it 303, 333

S.

SCEPTICISM, the author's definition of knowledge leads not to it 357
——The bishop of Worcester's arguing rather tends to it 359
——Syllogism not necessary to prevent it 385
Scripture, the author's veneration of it 341
——The use of ideas in understanding it ibid.
Soul, the immateriality of it we know not 474, &c.
——Its immortality not proved by reason 476, &c.
——But brought to light by revelation ibid.
Speculation, matters of it not proved by votes 371
Spirits, the word spirit does not necessarily denote immateriality 34
——The scripture speaks of material spirits 35
Substance not discarded by the essay, 5, &c.
——The author's account of it as clear as that of noted logicians, 8, &c.
——We talk like children about it 10
——The author and the bishop of Worcester agree in the notion of it 11, &c.
——How the mind forms the general idea of it 13
——The author makes not the being of it depend on the fancies of men 16, &c.
——Idea of it obscure 25, &c.
——The author's principles consist with the certainty of its existence 17, &c.
——The author ridiculed not the notion of it, by his similies of the elephant and tortoise 448
——The certainty of the being of substance does not suppose a clear idea of it ibid. &c.
Subsistence, a dialogue concerning it 436
Syllogism, certainty not to be placed in it 385, &c.

T.

TRINITY, nothing in the Essay of Understanding against it 3, &c.
——The author complains of being brought into the controversy 94, &c.
——How the doctrine of it is owned by him 197, &c.
Truth, the author's professed concern for it 258

W.

WORDS, how they come to be authorized 279, 280

THE END OF THE THIRD VOLUME.

1668

DATE DUE

JUN 15 1995

JUN 15 1997

DEMCO 38-297

B1253 .1794 v.3
The works of John Locke.
Princeton Theological Seminary-Speer Library
1 1012 00158 8872